When the Indian government looked for a partner to produce a coronavirus vaccine, Bharat Biotech was the natural contender. From Rotavirus to Hepatitis B vaccines and now Covaxin, AMITABH SINHA on how a small Hyderabad firm, dreaming big and risking huge, has emerged as one of India’s biggest biotech success stories

INTERVIEW

AMITABH SINHA, Founder & CEO, Bharat Biotech

What can the biotech industry do to combat diseases, deliver solutions?

We had skill sets and capabilities to do the vaccine. When the government asked for help in finding a vaccine and delivering it, we had the products to offer.

When we embarked on helping India with this vaccine, we had to ensure that it was not a V-shaped graph, but a U-shaped graph. So, we made sure that there were no bottlenecks. We had a clear need and roadmap. We understood that a lot of investment will be made in the early stages and that it is a high-risk venture.

To be able to deliver a vaccine in India, we needed to do a number of things. We had to make sure that the right infrastructure was in place, that we had the right talent, and that we had the right partnerships. Bharat Biotech has had a long history of working with the government and other partners to deliver vaccines.

Bharat Biotech has a long history of working with the government and other partners to deliver vaccines. From Rotavirus to Hepatitis B vaccines and now Covaxin, we have shown that we can deliver vaccines to the world through our partnerships and collaborations.

Pandemic, vaccine and controversy

The new Indian

What happened? Congress has been working on a health policy for decades and it was finally announced in the Lok Sabha on Monday. The proposal was welcomed by both parties except for the rise in political tension. The main opposition party is the Bharatiya Janata Party, while the main opposition is the Congress Party. The proposal is expected to come to parliament next week for final approval.

Harsh Vardhan, the Union Minister for Health and Family Welfare, said, "The proposal aims to streamline the health delivery system in the country. It will focus on improving health outcomes, enhancing access to healthcare, and strengthening the public health system."

Over the next few months, the Indian government plans to implement a nationwide health policy that will cover all citizens, regardless of their income level. The policy will provide free and universal health care, including preventive care and emergency services. It will also focus on improving the quality of health care and reducing the number of hospital admissions.

Reactions: The proposal has received mixed reactions from political leaders. While some have praised it for its focus on improving health outcomes, others have criticized it for being too ambitious and lacking funding. The方案也遭到了一些批评。一些人认为它太过激进，需要更多的资金支持。

Vaccine controversy continues

While the focus of the Vedanta controversy has shifted to the COVID-19 vaccine, the government has been accused of not following proper procurement procedures. The vaccine was procured through a process that was widely criticized for being opaque and not transparent. The government has also been accused of failing to provide adequate information about the vaccine to the public.

The government has been accused of trying to cover up the controversy through its new proposal. Some critics say that the proposal is a distraction from the underlying issues of the vaccine procurement process. Others say that it is an attempt to shift the focus from the vaccine controversy to other issues.

Overall, the proposal is expected to bring about significant improvements in the health delivery system. However, it remains to be seen whether it will be successful in achieving its goals.

Eying faster resolution, government may amend IBC to bring in pre-packs

The government may work to introduce pre-packs under the IBC in the next session of Parliament, sources told The Economic Times. The move will need to be approved by the government on financial parameters under applicable rules and decided by an ad-hoc committee, which will consist of a potential applicant and a financial advisor, followed by a third party to appraise the project.

India suffering in rapid structural reforms: Goyal

New Delhi: To accelerate the process of infrastructural development, the government has initiated significant reforms and structural changes. The government has implemented several measures to improve the infrastructural landscape, including the introduction of pre-packs under the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code, 2016 (IBC).

In its most recent effort to streamline the insolvency resolution process, the government is considering amending the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code, 2016 (IBC) to introduce pre-packs. The move is expected to provide a new option for businesses facing financial distress, allowing them to restructure their debts and emerge more quickly.

Pre-packs involve a restructuring of a company's debts and assets to meet the requirements of a new strategic investor or another entity. This process is designed to allow businesses to continue operating while negotiations for a new funding arrangement are taking place.

The proposed amendment to the IBC would allow for the creation of a committee of experts to examine the feasibility of pre-packs in specific cases. The committee would assess the eligibility of a company for pre-pack status and determine the terms of the restructuring.

The proposed amendment would also establish a framework for the selection of potential strategic investors and the negotiation of the terms of the pre-pack.

The government is expected to bring in a bill in the upcoming session of Parliament to legislate the new provisions. The bill is expected to be introduced in the Lok Sabha in the first half of the session and passed in both houses of Parliament.

In times of unusual stress, such as the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, we often seek solace in food that is familiar and nourishing. What is it that makes certain kinds of food more appealing than others in times of unease?

By American pop-biologist Joyce A Conca and Marjorie S Power, a two-year study they conducted "suggests the existence of a carbohydrate-consuming syndrome in which carbohydrate self-administration improves mildly dysphoric mood." A 1997 study by American psychologist Larry Chinonmore concluded "that it is known that carbohydrate consumption positively influences mood, particularly in mild depression and anxiety, and the effects are apparent in a wide range of foods and beverages." The study suggested that carbohydrate self-administration improves mildly dysphoric mood. And, indeed, this phenomenon has been observed in a wide range of foods and beverages.

In the study, researchers investigated the role of carbohydrates in mood and found that carbohydrates can improve mood in people with mild to moderate depression. The researchers also found that carbohydrates can improve mood in people with anxiety disorders.

It's not just a happy feeling; it's also a protective one. In her book Comfort (2017, Charles Scribner's Sons), Locher wrote, "Conditioned preferences for food are in- dispensable. In other words, we are born with preferences for certain foods. These preferences are shaped by our experience and are maintained through repetition."

One of the factors that contribute to the appeal of comfort food is the familiarity of the food. When we eat familiar foods, we associate them with positive memories and emotions, which can make us feel better and more relaxed.

Of course, there are many other factors that contribute to the appeal of comfort food, such as the way it is presented and the environment in which it is consumed. But the familiarity of the food is a key factor in its appeal.

The most interesting thing about comfort food is that it's a concept that's not always easy to explain. It's something that we all recognize but not always understand why.

The strategic importance of the post office expanded even further in 1877. The British army in India saw the post office as a means to control and transport. The postmasters were able to provide information on the movements of the troops, especially for those were no telegraphs. The army had its own communications network and had to transport messages, equipment, and supplies between the different army units. Post offices were strategically placed near the army camps to facilitate this process. In the late 1800s, the British government began to develop a more comprehensive telegraph system, which gradually replaced the post office for the transport of military communications.

PRESSURE ON INDIA WESTMIDLANDS

The BCCI on Saturday lodged a formal complaint with the MCC for the bowling of Indian team players, Jasprit Bumrah and Mohammed Siraj, which was allegedly aimed at the ball. The complaint was submitted to the MCC through the India Board of Control for Cricket in India, Cricket House, St John's Road, Mumbai, on Friday.

Earlier in the day, Cummins had been sent off after being hit by a short ball but by the end of the evening, Australia had taken the game back to the India bowlers for the first time since 2017. India 129/4 (SSmith, 41, RAshwin runout) vs Australia 103/2 (RAshwin, 39, MMohammed Siraj knelt to the ground). India was six runs short of a wicket on the second day of the first test at the Ageas Bowl in Southampton.

Cummins took 3-39 off 21.4 overs as Australia was reduced to 86/2 at stumps. The Indians have a small lead of 43 runs. Team India fielder Josh Hazlewood was found guilty of intentionally obstructing the fielder in the process. After the day's play, Australian skipper Tim Paine said he will appeal the decision.

On Saturday, the BCCI informed the MCC that Cummins, who is currently bowling at his best form, was allegedly sent off to avoid being hit by a short ball. The complaint also states that Siraj is not an expansion mover of the ball—hence he resorts to short-Rishabh Pant into a pull stroke, and the wicket

Cummins took 3-39 off 21.4 overs as Australia was reduced to 86/2 at stumps. The Indians have a small lead of 43 runs. Team India fielder Josh Hazlewood was found guilty of intentionally obstructing the fielder in the process. After the day's play, Australian skipper Tim Paine said he will appeal the decision.
