ASSAM ELECTORAL TENTATION: Peaceful Assam fences take toll, pregnant elephant latest casualty

HARISHNARAYANA SHARMA & LEE WRIGHT
NEW DELHI, DECEMBER 17

With a few days left before the end of the election season, Assam fencing companies’ officials and their suppliers are on a high alert, as the Assam government has already announced a moratorium on all construction work in the state. In a recent meeting with the Ministry of Home Affairs, the fencing companies had requested that the moratorium be lifted, as it would severely impact their business.

In recent years, Assam has been witnessing a sharp increase in the number of Corona fatalities. The state has also seen an increase in the number of corona cases, with over 30,000 new cases reported in the last week alone. The state government has been implementing various measures to control the spread of corona, including the closure of schools, colleges, and universities.

With the upcoming elections, the fencing companies are hoping for a boost in their business, as the state government will be spending a large amount of money on fencing work. They are also hoping for a relaxation of the moratorium, which will allow them to continue their work.

However, with the current situation, it remains to be seen whether the moratorium will be lifted or not. The fencing companies are hoping for the best, but they are also prepared for the worst.

Minister Jailender lashes out at ‘hypocrisy’

SOURABH RAMAN

On Thursday, the Rajya Sabha adopted a resolution against the laws that are being opposed by the farmers. The resolution was moved by Minister of State for Agriculture and Farmers Welfare Sant Ram Singh Chauhan, who is a member of the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP).

Chauhan said in his speech that the farmers have been protesting against the laws for the past one month, but the government has been trying to explain the benefits of the laws to them. He added that the farmers are not listening to the government and are not willing to accept the benefits.

Chauhan also said that the laws will benefit the farmers in the long run and will help in increasing the supply of foodgrains in the market.

On the other hand, opposition leaders have been criticising the laws and saying that they will lead to the exploitation of farmers.

The Rajya Sabha passed the resolution with a majority of votes.

Narender Singh
India and Bangladesh, the Perfect Neighbours

Over the years, the cooperation between India and Bangladesh has intensified and is often regarded as one of the most good-natured neighbours.

A joint 50 years ago, on December 16, 1971, India changed the world map by defeating Pakistan and founding Bangladesh as a separate country. The Indo-Bangladesh friendship dates back to the times when Mahatma Gandhi and his followers had crossed the border to help the Bengalis fight for their freedom. Today, the two countries enjoy a strong and cordial relationship, with regular high-level visits and cooperation in various sectors.

India and Bangladesh are best friends and neighbours. The two countries have a long and shared history, having fought together against British colonialism and established independent nations. They are committed to maintaining peace and prosperity in the region.

Both countries have a rich cultural heritage and a shared language, Hindi. The shared linguistic and cultural identity has facilitated strong people-to-people engagement. There is a high degree of cooperation in fields such as trade, investment, technology, education, and health.

The Indo-Bangladesh friendship is also characterized by a strong political and diplomatic relationship. Both countries support each other's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Economic cooperation is another key aspect of the Indo-Bangladesh relationship. India is Bangladesh's largest trading partner, and the two countries have signed several trade agreements. They work together to enhance bilateral economic ties and reduce trade deficits.

In conclusion, India and Bangladesh share a unique bond that transcends traditional geopolitics. Their close relationship is rooted in history, culture, and mutual interests. As they continue to strengthen their cooperation, the Indo-Bangladesh friendship is likely to remain a driving force for regional stability and prosperity.

SPECTRUM OF CHOICES

High reserve price for spectrum led to poor auction outcomes in past. Government must look beyond revenue maximization

N WATERTOWN: The government backed away from the process of auctioning 4G spectrum, as approved by the 22.25% of spectrum at a cost of Rs 14,000 crore. The auction was expected to be completed by March next year with hindered by the option of offering spectrum at a lower price and ensuring that the balance being paid is in annual instalments only. Considering the revenue maximization, the government had pegged reserve price for the remaining slot of 1800 MHz in the auction which is the highest band of spectrum. While the 1800 MHz slot fetched the most revenue, the minimum price set for the auction was Rs 1,400 crore.

Some experts believe that the government’s decision to defer the auction is due to the high reserve price for spectrum. According to them, the high reserve price has led to a decrease in the number of bidders, which has subsequently reduced the overall revenue generated from the auction.

The government has previously set high reserve prices in other auctions, resulting in lower participation and revenue. In the 2015 auction, the government had pegged a reserve price of Rs 5,000 crore for the 1800 MHz slot, which resulted in only one bidder and no revenue.

The move to defer the auction is also likely to affect the telecom operators, who are already struggling with high debt and low revenue. The high reserve price for spectrum has made it difficult for operators to bid and participate in the auction, leading to further strain on their finances.

In conclusion, the government’s decision to defer the auction is likely to have a negative impact on the telecom sector, as well as the government’s revenue goals. The government needs to reconsider its strategy for auctioning spectrum and ensure a level playing field for all operators, while also ensuring that it achieves its revenue targets.
Behind a struggle for personhood, a struggle for rights

As a young video journalist, I witnessed the harrowing scenes of farmers across Uttar Pradesh and Haryana in the weeks leading up to the GBRO's passage. The marchers, clad in their familiar khaki and green attire, were a sea of determination and resolve. They carried banners and placards, their voices echoing the cries of millions who were fighting for a just cause.

I was moved by their spirit, their resilience, and their unwavering commitment to their cause. The farmers were not just fighting for their lives, but for the future of their children and generations to come. They were demanding a just share in the fruits of their labor, and they were willing to put their lives on the line to get it.

As a journalism student, I documented their journey, capturing the essence of their struggle in every frame. I was struck by their determination, and I knew that their story needed to be told.

Two weeks ago, I had the privilege of covering the GBRO's passage at the Parliament, where I witnessed the historic moment firsthand. I was moved by the speeches and the spirit of unity that prevailed in the House. It was a moment that will be etched in my memory forever.

I look forward to continuing to document the GBRO's journey, and to bring their story to the world. It is a story of resilience, of determination, and of the human spirit. It is a story that needs to be heard.

The researchers tested aerosol generation during dental procedures.

Drill types create dense clouds of aerosol that spread out fast at 12 metres per second and can quickly contain an entire treatment room.

The researchers found that dentists used on average up to 120 ml/h of the region of the virus, each having the capacity to infect...

They tested a different type of drill, known as high torque, which extracts dust from the teeth and vents it out of the machine. The drill produces smaller particles that are more likely to be airborne. The researchers also compared the aerosol generation of drilling with a variety of other techniques. This is the first study to quantify the aerosol generation of drilling with a variety of other techniques.

The researchers measured the aerosol generation from different types of drills, including handpieces, and compared it with the aerosol generation from traditional dental drills. They found that using an air turbine instead of a handpiece significantly reduced the aerosol generation.

The researchers also found that the aerosol generation was highest during the initial penetration of the tooth, when the drill is first inserted. They recommended that dentists should use low-speed handpieces for this procedure to reduce aerosol generation.

What is a mutation in the spike protein?

A mutation in the spike protein is a change in the genetic code of the virus that allows it to adapt and evade the immune system. The spike protein is the main target of the immune response, and any changes in its structure can affect how effectively the immune system can combat the virus.

In the current study, the researchers found that the Indian variant of COVID-19 (B.1.617) has several mutations in the spike protein, including the E484Q mutation, which has been implicated in increased transmission and immune escape.

The E484Q mutation in the spike protein of the Indian COVID-19 strain is of significant concern because it has been detected in multiple countries and is associated with increased infectivity and reduced sensitivity to neutralizing antibodies. This mutation could potentially impact the efficacy of current vaccines and therapeutic drugs.

What is the role of the Indian variant of COVID-19 in the ongoing pandemic?

The Indian variant of COVID-19 (B.1.617) has become highly contagious, leading to a significant rise in COVID-19 cases in many countries. It has been identified in over 30 countries worldwide, and its rapid spread has led to concerns about its impact on the ongoing pandemic.

As Chinese tracked Muslims, Alibaba showed customers they could trust

Ravi M. Zong

As China’s government pushed to strengthen its control over religious minorities, the tech giant Alibaba has been at the forefront of the effort to collect and store data on people of different faiths.

The company has deployed facial recognition technology to identify and track people, including those living in regions such as Xinjiang and Qinghai, where the government has been accused of human rights abuses.

Alibaba is also expanding its presence in the global tech industry, with a focus on facial recognition and artificial intelligence.

Alibaba depleted is drawn into the global controversy over China’s treatment of Uighurs

The Chinese government has been accused of enacting a brutal crackdown on the Uighur community, who are predominantly Muslim, with reports of mass detentions and forced labor.

In December, the United Nations Human Rights Council condemned China’s policies in Xinjiang, saying that the Chinese government was committing human rights abuses.

Alibaba is under pressure to respond to the international criticism, but the company has so far refused to comment on the allegations.

The company’s response to the criticism has been met with skepticism, with some experts questioning whether Alibaba is truly committed to ethical business practices.

Alibaba is facing increasing scrutiny from regulators around the world, with concerns about its market power and data privacy.

The company’s handling of the Uighur and other minority issues has raised questions about its commitment to human rights.

As the international pressure on Alibaba grows, the company faces a delicate balancing act as it tries to maintain its position as a global leader in technology and commerce.

Why has US put India on economic watch list?

What are the factors

Rupiah Rangav

An increase in oil prices, the US-China trade tension, and the ongoing coronavirus pandemic are some of the factors that have contributed to the economy's slowdown.

Why has US put India on economic watch list?

The US government has placed India on its “economic watch list” for the second consecutive year, citing concerns over India’s large current account deficit, high government debt, and rising public debt.

The US Treasury Department said in a report that India’s large current account deficit, high government debt, and rising public debt are of concern. The report also noted that the US government is monitoring India’s progress in reducing its fiscal deficit and improving its balance of payments.

What does US watch list mean?

It means that the US government is monitoring the country’s economic situation closely and is likely to take action if the situation worsens.

The US government’s decision to place India on its economic watch list is likely to have an impact on the Indian economy, as it could lead to a rise in the cost of borrowing and make it more difficult for Indian companies to access foreign capital.

What will be the impact if this list is extended to India?

It could lead to a rise in the cost of borrowing and make it more difficult for Indian companies to access foreign capital.

Why has US put India on economic watch list?

The US government has placed India on its “economic watch list” for the second consecutive year, citing concerns over India’s large current account deficit, high government debt, and rising public debt.

What does US watch list mean?

It means that the US government is monitoring the country’s economic situation closely and is likely to take action if the situation worsens.

The ball that got Pujara that extra tweak. His first movement to counter the bail was to try and get forward. But Lyon did the skill to control the air-time. It wasn’t the only time it came too quickly.

Unlike Pujara, Kohli clearly allowed himself to be caught at the crease. The first and again he forced his face to free himself from the pressure of the edge. The screwball was played by the Australians. He was not the only one to allow the ball to go far and get forward. He didn’t allow the ball to get too far, so it was not too tricky. Pujara was not the only one to try and get anywhere near the pitch of the ball. In his earlier match, Lyon didn’t stop him. The challenge was to be found in the way the ball moved. The ball had been clean, and Lyon could have tried to get forward. But the ball had moved. It was too tricky. Lyon said that there was a trick that could get forward, and working the ball to the other side. The ball that got Pujara had that extra tweak. If pressing forward has its pitfalls, what
