The Supreme Court on Monday allowed states to start setting up Covid-19 isolation wards in existing hospitals. It observed that patients hospitalised for Covid-19 would need to be treated at the earliest.

The bench was hearing as suo moto proceedings launched by the Centre after the Supreme Court on Thursday, exempted the comedian and others from any action.

On Thursday, Goswami had challenged a ban on his show imposed by the Centre, stating that it violated his fundamental right to free speech and expression. A case with 420 SAR was earlier registered against Goswami in connection with his remarks on Republic TV.

The court has taken suo moto proceedings in the case.

The bench said it was considering Goswami’s challenge to the ban.

A bench of the Delhi High Court had on February 2 stayed the Centre’s order to ban Republic TV.

On Thursday, Goswami, who is also the owner of Republic TV, had filed a petition in the Delhi High Court seeking its intervention in the matter.

The bench had allowed the petitioner to approach the Supreme Court for relief.

The petition had sought a “mandatory stay on the said order” of the Centre.

On February 2, the Centre had ordered the ban on Republic TV for 18 months, saying the channel had “constantly violated the rules of electronic media content and responsibility".

Covid-19 cases:
The Centre also said “withholding the channel’s licence with immediate effect will prevent the broadcaster from spreading fake news and further contumacious conduct”.

While issuing the order, the Centre had held that the petition must be heard before a bench of the Supreme Court consisting of Chief Justice NV Ramana and Justice Sanjeev Khanna.

The Centre had also said the Supreme Court was to act as a court of record, which would guide the process of “appropriate action in this matter to prevent any spread of rumour and fake news”.

The Centre also contended that the ban was not an order of the Supreme Court, which would be issued only after “due process of law”. On February 3, the Centre then moved an application in the Supreme Court for a stay on the order. The Centre had moved an application in the Supreme Court for a stay on the order.

The Supreme Court’s suggestion of a committee of farm law stakeholders offers a way forward — both sides shall take it.

The much awaited SC-appointed committee is not the be-all end-all solution. It will have to be backed by a strong law and the government should keep the law at arm’s length as it is currently being used by the subject governments. There’s a chance that this setup may be used by the higher judiciary to control their finances and ensure that the government strengthens farm laws.

On Friday, Prime Minister Narendra Modi, addressing a press meet at Mumbai, talked about how “voluntary” farmers in his home state were prepared to denounce their past mistakes and help the nation。“But the present system is not working properly. It is failing the farmers, the industry and the country. There is a need for a new system,” Modi said.

Migrant workers have been hard hit by the pandemic and the lockdowns, and the government should take note of this. The SC-appointed committee should not be a rubber-stamp body. It must be given the necessary powers to hear both sides and take a call on the issue of constitutional validity of the laws.

The kids are not alright

Worsening of child nutrition calls for immediate and decisive correction

SUNNY JOSÉ

Children are the major users of health care services in the current scenario. However, the improvement in child health metrics over the last few decades has been disappointing. child malnutrition is on the rise, and one in two children is stunted. By 2050, India could lose 740 million man-years due to the health and socio-economic burden of stunting. Stunting in children is not just a social problem but a key indicator of overall health and wellbeing. Stunted children are more likely to have higher rates of mortality, morbidity, and lower productivity. They are also more likely to become stunted adults and pass on the problem to their children. The cycle of undernutrition is thus perpetuated.

India has a diversified population, and the epidemiology of undernutrition varies across regions. In particular, undernutrition is a significant concern in the Northeastern region, where the prevalence of stunting is higher compared to other parts of the country. The reasons for this are complex and multifaceted, including socio-economic factors, geographical remoteness, and inadequate access to healthcare services.

SDG 2030 targets for child nutrition include reducing the number of stunted children to zero. However, India is far from achieving this target. According to the latest data from the UNICEF, in 2020, 39% of children under the age of 5 in India were stunted. This is a significant concern as India is the most populous country in the world, and the burden of undernutrition is disproportionately high among children.

The WHO and UNICEF have identified several strategies to combat undernutrition, including improving access to high-quality food, increasing access to health care, and improving education and awareness-raising activities. However, these strategies need to be implemented at a larger scale and with more urgency. The government of India has a key role to play in this regard, and it needs to take immediate action to address the issue of child malnutrition.

In conclusion, child stunting is a significant problem in India, and urgent action is needed to address it. The government needs to prioritize child nutrition, and investments in health care, education, and food security are essential to break the cycle of undernutrition. It is time for the government to take bold actions to ensure that every child in India has a right to good health and a bright future.

Contradiction in reports, says SSP after Dhanbad admirals criticise police ‘excesses’

ABHIJEET ANAND

Days after Dhanbad admirals criticised the police for ‘excessive action’ during the farmers’ protest, the state police on Wednesday maintained that the entire operation was properly handled. The admirals had also absolved the police of any excesses.

An admirals’ (Army, Navy, Air Force) statement released after the Dhanbad incident had said that the police had acted within the limits of authority.

A police spokesperson said that Dhanbad SSP Uma Shankar Singh had been directed to take appropriate action against the erring police officials.

Tax notices to nearly 14,000 Punjab farmers for supporting farmers’ protest

NEW DELHI, DECEMBER 18

The Central government has issued tax notices to nearly 14,000 farmers for supporting the farmers’ protest, the Bharti Kisan Union (Bhanu) said on Saturday.

The Centre’s action comes after the farmers started selling crops on the Peripheral Expressways (PEEs) around the nation’s capital, a few days after the Centre issued tax notices to farmers for supporting the farmers’ protest

The Bharti Kisan Union (Bhanu) had last week filed a petition in the Supreme Court. The Centre was trying to discredit the farmers’ movement and is trying to turn the farmers into criminals, the Bharti Kisan Union (Bhanu) spokesperson said.

“After sending notice to the farmers, they are taking the action. These actions are taking place on the pretexts of trivial issues,” the Bharti Kisan Union (Bhanu) spokesperson said.

The Bharti Kisan Union (Bhanu) also said that it was not against the Centre for taxing the farmers but it had issues with the Centre on the pretext of these notices.

A massive hack in US, using a novel set of tools

One of the biggest cyberattacks to have targeted US government agencies and private companies, the "SolarWinds Hack," is being seen as a likely global effort. How was it carried out, and what kind of data has been compromised? Why have US government officials and politicians named Russia?

One of the most significant indications of the SolarWinds hack is the discovery of a novel set of tools, which cyber analysts are calling "sophisticated threat actors." The attack was carried out using a set of tools that have not been seen before, and which have not been found anywhere else in the public domain. The tools were used to infect SolarWinds' products, allowing the attackers to gain a foothold in the company's systems.

FireEye, which first discovered the hack, said that the tools were used to gain access to the SolarWinds network, and then to move laterally through the systems. The tools were designed to be stealthy and undetectable, and were able to remain hidden for an extended period of time.

The SolarWinds hack is believed to have been carried out by a group of hackers working for the Russian government, and is thought to have been funded by the Russian government.

Threatened entities include the United States government, the United States Congress, and other high-profile targets.

The SolarWinds hack has exposed significant vulnerabilities in the US government's information security posture, and has raised serious concerns about the security of the US financial system.

The SolarWinds hack has also raised questions about the role of the Russian government in the hack, and about the effectiveness of the US government's response to the hack.

The SolarWinds hack is a significant reminder of the need for a robust and effective information security posture, and of the need for a coordinated and effective response to cyber threats. The SolarWinds hack is a warning to the US government and other entities that they need to take action to prevent similar attacks in the future.
Vatican's Nativity scenet this year raises eyebrows

Vatican’s new Christmas Nativity scene was unveiled on December 18, 2020, in St. Peter’s Square, and it has caused some consternation among churchgoers and art enthusiasts.

The scene, created by a team of Italian artists, is a modern interpretation of the traditional Nativity scene, featuring a group of Weebles, a popular toy, arranged in the center of the display. The Weebles are a group of figures made of clay and ceramic, which are known for their ability to stand on their heads or in any position, and they are often used as a symbol of stability and resilience.

The scene also includes a group of children, who are depicted as being led by a Native American to lead the celebration. Some people have criticized the use of the Weebles as being disrespectful to the tradition of the Nativity scene, while others have praised the creativity of the modern interpretation.

In the words of the artist, the scene is meant to provide a new perspective on the Nativity story, highlighting the themes of resilience and stability.

The scene will be on display in St. Peter’s Square until Christmas Day, and it is expected to draw large crowds of tourists and pilgrims.

‘Ambedkar warned us about dangers of bhakti in politics, bhakti in sport is the same’

MHIRVADA & SAVOURKANTI

December 18

Pundits have been mused about dangers of bhakti in politics. The word is derived from Sanskrit bhakti which means loving devotion to a god. Bhakti is associated with bhakti in politics and bhakti in sport.

It’s a fair criticism. (In the book,) I’ve also said, ‘Bhakti is a lot more than a fanatical love of his country... It’s a social order that is going to be fearful of competition...’

I think there is enough proof. When he wanted to turn more, the hoe felt like as on one. That’s a fair criticism. (In the book,) I’ve also said, ‘Bhakti is a lot more than a fanatical love of his country. It’s a social order that is going to be fearful of competition...’
