The vineyard appropos: Bill passed. Vishwanath who lost the Assembly by-election he contested on a BJP ticket in December 2020 was named as BJM by Chief Minister Tirath Singh Rawat. Vishwanath said all parties were against announcing results of postal ballots in any situation. He added the Congress too has been against fixing election dates in the past.

Voter turnout among women and the elderly was unusually low, some attributed it to the anxiety over the fourth wave of COVID-19. Several polling booths were reported to be closed by the period of voting. A senior police officer said the police were deployed at polling stations, but no incident was reported.

Governing Sikkim

delays in processing or other reasons. It's a significant concern, especially in rural areas where internet connectivity is often a challenge.

Some of these problems have been addressed in recent years, but there are still areas that need improvement. The Indian government has been working on improving digital infrastructure, including setting up more internet service providers in rural areas. However, there is still a long way to go before everyone in Sikkim has access to the internet.

Overall, the digitization of Sikkim has been a success story, with significant improvements in the last few years. The government has taken steps to ensure that everyone has access to the digital world, but there is still work to be done.

Fixing the Issues

The government of Sikkim has taken several steps to address the issues faced by the digital divide. They have invested in setting up more internet service providers in rural areas, especially in remote areas like Kinlong and Tsongsa. They have also introduced inclusive internet policies to ensure that everyone has access to the internet, including low-income and marginalized groups.

The government has also been working on improving digital literacy in the state. They have set up digital literacy centers in various parts of the state, where people can learn how to use digital technologies. These centers are staffed by expert trainers who provide personalized training.

The state government has also launched several digital initiatives, such as the Sikkim E-Governance Project and the Sikkim Digital Infrastructure and One-Stop-Shop (DIOS) centers. These initiatives aim to provide citizens with easy access to government services online.

Despite these efforts, there is still a long way to go before everyone in Sikkim has access to the internet. The government needs to continue working on improving digital infrastructure, especially in remote areas, and providing digital literacy training to ensure that everyone can take advantage of the digital world.

In conclusion, the digitization of Sikkim is a significant achievement, but there is still work to be done to address the digital divide. The government needs to continue investing in digital infrastructure and providing digital literacy training to ensure that everyone has access to the internet.

development area, which has a large number of rural areas with limited internet connectivity.

As a result, many rural residents in Sikkim are still unable to access the internet, despite the government's efforts to improve digital infrastructure.

For example, let's consider the situation in a village in Sikkim. The village has a small population, and the local government has invested in setting up an internet service provider. However, due to a lack of demand, the service provider has decided to withdraw from the village.

This is a common issue in many rural areas in Sikkim. The government has invested in setting up internet service providers, but due to the low demand, they have decided to withdraw from these areas. This leaves many residents without access to the internet.

Another issue is the cost of internet services. Many rural residents in Sikkim cannot afford to pay for internet services, especially in areas with limited income. This makes it difficult for them to access the internet and participate in the digital world.

Moreover, the government has set up digital literacy centers in various parts of the state, where people can learn how to use digital technologies. These centers are staffed by expert trainers who provide personalized training.

When the last journey is tougher than before, they step in

The COVID-19 pandemic has made the journey for families of COVID victims tougher than before. The last journey, which used to be easier for the family members, has now become a daunting task due to the pandemic. The families have to take extra precautions and follow strict protocols to ensure the safety of themselves and others.

The last journey becomes even more challenging when there is a shortage of ambulances and other medical facilities. The families have to be prepared to face such situations and make necessary arrangements to ensure the peaceful journey of their loved ones.

The families have to be aware of the latest guidelines and protocols for the last journey during the pandemic. They should consult with medical professionals and follow the instructions provided by health authorities. The families should also consider hiring professional funeral services to handle the last journey safely.

TEST AND PROTEST

For Bijli name-calling may be a tried, tested way to test Punjab farmers’ protest. But it is unwise and fraught with risk.

The New/OLD

The Centre has a number of pressing problems at its disposal. But the one with the most far-reaching proportions is the question of electricity disconnection. Over the past few years, a series of decisions on the topic have been taken by various authorities.

For instance, the Supreme Court has ruled that disconnection is illegal. But this has not stopped the authorities from carrying out such actions. In some cases, disconnection has been carried out without any notice to the affected parties.

This is a serious issue because it not only affects the livelihood of the affected individuals but also impacts their basic human rights. Disconnection can lead to loss of income, food, and shelter. It can also result in social injustice, as those who are unable to pay their bills may be deprived of essential services.

Moreover, the current situation is not just a matter of disconnection. It is a systemic issue that needs to be addressed. The government must take steps to ensure that disconnection is replaced with a system that provides equitable access to electricity.

In conclusion, the issue of electricity disconnection is a serious one that requires immediate attention. The government must work towards finding a solution that respects the basic human rights of all individuals and ensures that they have access to essential services. Only then can we hope to build a fair and just society.

At protest site, farmers want govt to give MSP guarantee ‘in writing’

HARISH SHARMA
DELHI, NOVEMBER 30

ON THE frontline of protests against the new farm laws, farmers are demanding that the government provide written guarantees for Minimum Support Price (MSP). The Centre has been providing MSP to the farmers for decades. However, in recent years, the government has been facing pressure from different groups to increase MSP and ensure its timely payment. The farmers have been expressing their dissatisfaction with the government's decision to lower MSP for certain crops and delay payments.

The farmers' demand for written guarantees is based on the belief that verbal assurances are not enough and that a written commitment would provide legal protection. The farmers are also concerned about the possibility of changes in government policies and the need for a consistent and predictable support system.

The government has been maintaining that they are committed to implementing the existing MSP system and that the farmers will continue to receive the same benefits under the new system. However, the farmers are demanding a written guarantee to ensure that their rights are protected.

The Supreme Court had earlier ordered the government to provide written guarantees for MSP, but the farmers are demanding more specific and detailed guarantees. The farmers are also calling for a separate committee to monitor the implementation of MSP and ensure that farmers receive fair prices for their crops. The farmers have been demanding that the government should provide a written commitment to maintain the existing MSP system and ensure its timely payment.

The farmers' demand for written guarantees is part of their broader demand for a just and fair MSP system that would ensure their livelihood and help them to sustain their farming activities. The farmers are also demanding an increase in MSP for certain crops and the removal of farm laws that they believed undermine their rights and interests.

The government has been responding to the farmers' demands by assuring them that they are committed to implementing the existing MSP system and that they will continue to receive the same benefits under the new system. Why influenza makes people vulnerable to bacterial infection

INFLUENZA is caused by a virus, but the most common type of death is caused by a bacterial infection rather than the flu virus itself. Why this is the case is an area of unanswerable questions that has puzzled scientists for years. In an article published in the journal PNAS, they can also be asked readers to search on Covid-19, the same virus that has already caused serious problems for the Indian government.

The researchers cite the example of the Spanish flu, which killed an estimated 50 million people worldwide during 1918-20. Unlike any other pandemic in history, the Spanish flu was caused not by a virus, but by bacteria, in particular pneumococci.

Patients with flu were infected but not killed by the flu virus, but instead by a secondary bacterial infection. This is because the flu makes these patients vulnerable to such bacterial infections by weakening their immune system. The pandemic was not caused by the flu virus, but by a secondary bacterial infection.

“Patients with influenza are at risk of bacterial pneumonia, which is caused by pneumococci,” said lead author Dr. Vicky Senders, a research scientist at the University of Regina’s Department of Medicine.

The study is published in the journal PNAS.

Biden announces his economy team signaling more diverse White House

Mon, November 23, 2020

Biden's cabinet is expected to be diverse and inclusive, reflecting the broad range of people and perspectives in the United States. The new administration will focus on creating a more inclusive and equitable society, as well as addressing the pressing issues facing America today.

The first indications of the diversity and inclusiveness of Biden's cabinet can be seen in the names of the nominees. Many of them come from traditionally underrepresented groups, including women, people of color, and LGBTQ+ individuals.

President-elect Joe Biden has nominated several women to high-level positions, including the first woman of color to be named as attorney general, and the first woman to serve as secretary of state. He has also nominated several LGBTQ+ individuals to key roles, including the first openly gay man to be named as ambassador to France.

The Biden administration is expected to focus on addressing some of the nation's most pressing issues, including poverty, inequality, and climate change.

Biden, in a televised address, assured the nation that the US remains committed to addressing the challenges facing the world, including the COVID-19 pandemic.

In his address, Biden emphasized the importance of unity and cooperation, and called on Americans to come together to tackle the pressing issues facing the country.

The Biden administration is expected to prioritize issues such as addressing the COVID-19 pandemic, rebuilding the economy, and addressing climate change.

In addition to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Biden administration will also be facing a number of other pressing issues, including poverty, inequality, and social justice.

Last year, President Donald Trump announced his intentions to withdraw from the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, which is a critical international agreement aimed at limiting global warming.

The Biden administration is expected to rejoin the Paris Agreement, an international agreement aimed at limiting global warming.

The Biden administration is also expected to address the issue of racial inequality and police brutality, which have been a major concern in the United States in recent years.

GIANMARCO VALLI had been dead for days. His body had been shampooed, the inevitable fate that awaits any veteran Formula 1 driver. No one had expected him to die and certainly not in a scrum to leave the safety of his car. They had left him down the day, the day that his life ended, and the day that his memory will live on forever.

HAAS DRIVER Romain Grosjean credited the safety of the car and the safety shield with saving his life.

5,000 kilograms and a laboratory test of a scale of 225 kilograms. When connotated (an allusion to an anecdote), it was the breakfast made to him, for him. At 10am, he had the ability to switch off the electrical grid and operate a computer at ease to switch on his car. In F1, it seemed the same power was used on the car. The end cause is yet to be determined.

3. Two years ago, the Belgian Grand Prix, a tarmac race and not much of a tarmac race, helped build on and embrace Charles Leclerc’s talent and to show how he was a star among 18-year-olds. He was not in the mood to waste time. He had to show everyone that he was a star.

4. Then there is the question of the driver’s income. Leclerc has already said that he was a star among 18-year-olds. He had to show everyone that he was a star.
