Phase 3 efficacy data is missing, say experts, call for close monitoring

In 3-month trip to India, Christchurch attacker visited Goa, Mumbai and Jaipur

Travelled in November to Dec 11, 2015 to Feb 18, 2016, mostly visited south states

DEEPTAM PANT

Even after two years of the Christchurch mosque shooting in which 51 Muslims were killed by a white supremacist, no government has absolutely enforced a national ban on the sale of military-style firearms.

But many Indians are fasted to the side.

SABYASACHI MAUSUMI

For India, Christchurch was a wake-up call.

A ceasefire was announced on April 9.

At the press conference, Prime Minister Narendra Modi said that the incident was a “tragedy” for the entire world.

In a joint statement with New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern, they vowed to work together to prevent such incidents in the future.

But the reality is that the government has not taken any significant steps to address the issue.

The United Nations也表示了关注。

The incident has sparked a global debate on gun control and terrorism.

But in India, the government has been slow to act.

At the same time, the incident has also raised questions about the role of the media in spreading hate and inciting violence.

In an interview with The Indian Express, Union Home Minister Amit Shah said that the government was working on a “comprehensive” package of measures to tackle terrorism.

But the government’s response has been criticized by many.

“We cannot afford to ignore the lessons of Christchurch,” said Meenakshi Srinivasan, a former UN diplomat.

“The government has to take a step back and look at the bigger picture.”

EXPLAINED

THE COVID VACCINES APPROVED BY INDIA

From efficacy to cost, here’s everything we know about the vaccines

Before the attack in March 2021, Bharat had set up a production line at its facility in Pune for Covaxin, the vaccine developed by the Institute of Microbiology, ICMR, and the Serum Institute of India. Bharat Biotech said in a statement that the vaccine was “fully approved” by the government for emergency use, under the Drugs for Emergency Situation (DFS) scheme.

The DFS scheme provides a faster pathway for the approval of drugs and vaccines in the event of a public health emergency. Under the scheme, the Drugs Controller General of India (DCGI) can approve a drug or vaccine for use in an emergency without the need for a full clinical trial.

The Covaxin vaccine was approved under the DFS scheme for use in emergency situations, which means that it can be used for vaccination in the event of a public health emergency, such as a pandemic or outbreak.

However, the approval of Covaxin under the DFS scheme does not mean that it is completely safe and effective. As with all vaccines, Covaxin has the potential to cause side effects, and it is important for people to be aware of these potential risks before getting vaccinated.

In addition to Covaxin, Bharat Biotech is also developing a coronavirus vaccine using RNA technology, which is expected to be approved under the DFS scheme as well. The RNA vaccine is designed to be more stable and easier to manufacture than traditional vaccines, which could make it a valuable addition to the country’s vaccine arsenal.

Overall, the approval of Covaxin and the RNA vaccine under the DFS scheme is a positive step for India’s vaccination efforts, as it will help to ensure that the country has access to safe and effective vaccines during this critical time. However, it is important for people to carefully consider the potential risks and benefits of vaccination before deciding to get the vaccine.

Not business as usual

Post Covid development model will need public-private partnership, different business leadership

Vikram S Mehta

A PHILIPS WATCH, just Prime Minister Narendra Modi himself, can show you the precise moment involved in the formulation of the anti-viral Covaxin. ‘And as our leaders of Punjab (and other states) are seen at the horizons of Delhi, now the fates of Delhi are seen ahead of Punjab’s,” he comments. Then he would like to draw his audience’s attention to this moment. One of her concerns is that the Army should have a strong voice in the national government. One of the major problems is that it is not possible to.outsource any portion of the national government. But this is one area where there is some evidence that one group or another, businesses, entrepreneurs, scientists — can start arguing and emerging economic and social problems on their own. They have to work together to resolve them. But it looms and its consequences are existential.

So, if there is one straw that COVID has offered, it is the tangible scare that no one group or the state, markets, businesses, entrepreneurs, artists — can tackle existing and emerging economic and social problems on their own. They have to work together to resolve them. But it looms and its consequences are existential.

Schemes like a venture capital fund for R&I, and a credit enhancement guarantee plan have already benefited countless youngsters. Efforts are also being made to structure those handholds to those youth who want to become entrepreneurs through a network of incubation structures and other financial assistance initiatives. More and more schemes are being implemented with well-defined stages for implementation and institutional and technology support. Thus the problem became more urgent.

On the last seven decades, Delhi have remained the centre. There have been two parallel trends: one, that the visible part of the visible trends is the emergence of a new economic and political power in the city. The other is that the invisible. Delhi now has more power and influence than it ever had before. It is no longer just the capital of India, but also the economic and political hub of the country.

The city is rapidly becoming an economic powerhouse, with a growing population of young people and a vibrant startup scene. However, the city is also facing challenges such as high costs of living and inadequate infrastructure. The city needs to address these issues in order to sustain its growth.

The pandemic, lockdowns and the economic crisis have forced a large number of people, especially migrant workers, to look for work in order to support their families. Among them, those who have lost their jobs are the worst hit. The situation in the rural areas is no better. The government has already announced several schemes to help these workers, but the implementation of these schemes has been slow and inefficient.

The pandemic has also highlighted the need for better public health systems, especially in rural areas. The government must take steps to improve the healthcare infrastructure in these areas. This will not only help the workers who have lost their jobs, but also ensure that the economy recovers faster.

The pandemic has also had a significant impact on the education sector. The government must ensure that all students, especially those from low-income backgrounds, have access to quality education. This will not only help them in the short term, but also ensure that they are better equipped to face the challenges of the future.

The pandemic has also emphasized the importance of a strong and responsive government. The government must take a lead role in implementing these schemes and ensuring that they reach those who need them most. This will not only help the workers who have lost their jobs, but also ensure that the economy recovers faster.

WHILE THE INDIAN EXPRESS has always been an advocate of a steady decline in the country's national politics, the proposal put forward by Manish Tewari, the general secretary of the Congress, has raised some eyebrows. While the concept of a 'new politics' continues to be a popular topic of discussion in the country, the recent developments in the political landscape have led to a fresh surge of interest in Tewari's proposal.

The proposal suggests the introduction of a 14-point agenda for the Congress party, which is intended to address the party's current challenges and ensure its future success. The agenda includes a commitment to strengthen the party's organizational structure, improve its communication strategy, and engage with the youth and other new-age voters.

Tewari's proposal also emphasizes the importance of a "new vision" for the country's political landscape, one that prioritizes the needs of the common man and woman. It calls for the party to be more inclusive and representative, and to work towards creating a more just and equitable society.

The proposal has been met with mixed reactions. While some have welcomed it as a step towards rejuvenating the Congress party, others have criticized it as being too ideologically driven and lacking in substance.

In conclusion, the proposal put forward by Manish Tewari is a significant step towards redefining the Congress party's political agenda. While it remains to be seen how effectively it will be implemented, it is clear that the party needs to take bold steps towards revitalizing itself and ensuring its survival in the days to come.

The giant machine, which can light up a small town, is seeking a renewable energy arm race

President Xi Jinping announced a new plan to build a fully modern military by 2050, which is expected to grow faster in the coming decades, as the country's armed forces are being equipped with new technology, according to a government announcement.

In a sign of the country's growing military power, the Ministry of Defense said on Monday that it would be about to build a new military machine that would be capable of turning out 13 megawatts of power, enough to light up a town.

The turning diameter of the machine, which is nearly the length of a football field, is expected to be completed by 2030.

The president made the announcement at a military meeting in Beijing, where he said the new machine would be the first of its kind in the world, and that it would be capable of generating 13 megawatts of power.

The announcement came as China's military budget is expected to grow by 7% in the coming year, according to a government report.

China's military budget is already one of the largest in the world, and it is expected to continue to grow in the coming years as the country seeks to strengthen its military capabilities.

The announcement was greeted with enthusiasm by military analysts, who said it would be a significant boost for the country's defense capabilities.

But some analysts cautioned that China's military buildup could also provoke a response from other countries, particularly the United States, which has a large military budget and is its largest spender.

"It's a big step forward," said one analyst. "But it's also a warning to other countries that China is serious about building a stronger military."
