Solution to impasse on farm laws lies primarily in political domain — more with government than centre

IT IS NOT yet a resolution, but Qatar and Arab Gulf neighbours have agreed in principle to lift their years-long boycott of Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates — lifted their unsuccessful blockade of Qatar.

The agreement comes after months of negotiations and months of quiet diplomacy, particularly by US President Joe Biden, who was keen to see the dispute between Qatar and its Gulf Arab neighbours resolved.

The agreement was announced on Monday by the Arab Gulf countries, which include Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, and Qatar.

The agreement was reached after a high-level meeting in New York between Qatar and the Gulf countries, according to reports.

The agreement is seen as a major step towards resolving the ongoing dispute, which had started in 2017 and culminated in the formation of a “blockade” by four Arab states against Qatar:

The agreement includes several key points:

1. The four Arab states — Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, and Qatar — agreed to lift the boycott imposed on Qatar in 2017.
2. The agreement also includes an end to all political and economic boycotts against Qatar.
3. The agreement calls for the restoration of all diplomatic relations between Qatar and the Gulf countries.

The agreement is seen as a significant step towards resolving the ongoing dispute and restoring normal relations between Qatar and the Gulf countries.

The agreement has been welcomed by the international community, with many expressing hope that it marks the beginning of a new era of cooperation and stability in the region.

The agreement is also seen as a significant achievement for US President Joe Biden, who has been working to resolve the dispute for several months.

Farm protests, big picture

The protest by thousands of farmers at Delhi’s borders has brought a focus to issues in agriculture in India. One of the country’s leading policy experts provides a primer on some important questions.

What are the crops other than sugar canes, which are also subsidised?

Vegetables and other crops are also subsidised. However, the crop-wise data available from the Agriculture Ministry is not comprehensive, and the data on other crops is not easily available.

Why are farmers agitating against the recently passed laws?

Farmers in India are protesting against the three agriculture-related laws introduced in September 2020. These laws allow farmers to sell directly to corporates at prices above Minimum Support Price (MSP) instead of being dependent on the government’s procurement system.

What is the minimum support price?

The Minimum Support Price (MSP) is a statutory guarantee under which the government procures crops from farmers at a price which is at least equal to the cost of production plus a predetermined margin.

Are what and where the crops?

While the government decides MSPs, the landowners decide what crops to grow. In large quantities, they are required in cities.jsonpnlive.com

A search warrant was immediately executed at the home of Christopher Pappas, 60, after he was arrested on charges of threatening to harm US Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi.

A federal judge immediately ordered police to arrest and detain Pappas, who is accused of threatening to kill Pelosi and her husband, Paul Pelosi.

The judge also ordered that Pappas be restrained from communicating with or approaching Pelosi or her staff.

Pappas has been charged with making threats against a member of Congress, a federal officer, and a federal facility.

Five people have been arrested in Hong Kong on charges of participating in an illegal assembly, according to local media.

The arrests were made on Sunday, following protests in the city against the new national security law and a recent decision by Beijing to ban pro-independence politicians from running in local elections.

Hong Kong police said they had received information that the five people had planned to participate in an illegal assembly on Sunday afternoon.

The protesters, who were part of a group of about 100 people, were seen waving flags and chanting slogans against the government.

For Years, She Worked Anonymously Within The Agency To Help Scientists Intensify Studies Of A Changing Planet

Inside the CIA, scientist Linda Zall became a spy for planet Earth

William Joddick

The CIA became a lab for climate change research in 2003, when then-director George Tenet said the agency needed to be “fully engaged” in climate change issues.

Tennant, who had been a top assistant to former director John Deutch, was named director of the Intelligence Advanced Research Projects Activity (IARPA), which was set up to fund radical research in intelligence and security.

Tennant’s appointment marked a significant shift in the CIA’s approach to climate change.

It was also a sign that the CIA was beginning to take climate change seriously as a national security threat.

The agency had been slow to recognize the potential dangers posed by climate change, and it had until then focused on traditional intelligence activities such as counterterrorism and counterintelligence.

But with Tennant at the helm, the CIA began to explore new ways to use its resources to help address climate change.

One of the most prominent of these efforts was the agency’s sponsorship of the “Climate Change Intelligence” program, which was launched in 2005.

The program aimed to use the CIA’s expertise in intelligence analysis to help scientists understand the potential impacts of climate change and to develop strategies for reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Tennant himself was a huge proponent of the program, and he often spoke about the importance of using the CIA’s resources to help solve the climate crisis.

His attention to the program was reflected in its rapid growth. By 2010, the program had grown to include more than 100 staff members, and it was producing regular reports on the latest climate science.

But the program’s success was also the result of the agency’s willingness to work with other government agencies and with scientists around the world.

Tennant was particularly active in working with the Department of Energy, which is the lead agency for climate change research in the US government.

In 2008, he worked with DOE officials to establish a joint task force to coordinate the agency’s climate change efforts.

That task force quickly became the centerpiece of the agency’s climate change program, and it was responsible for developing the agency’s first comprehensive climate change strategy.

The strategy, which was released in 2010, outlined a range of actions that the agency could take to help address climate change, including supporting research on new technologies and working with other government agencies to develop policies to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

The program was also notable for its emphasis on data-sharing and collaboration.

Tennant believed that the agency’s best chance of making a difference on climate change was by working closely with other government agencies and with scientists around the world.

And as the program grew, Tennant continued to be a vocal advocate for its goals.

In a 2013 interview, he said that the agency’s work on climate change was “not just about climate change, it’s about national security.”

He pointed to the potential for climate change to threaten national security, such as by causing conflicts over water resources or by disrupting food supplies.

But he also believed that the agency could play a key role in helping to address climate change.

“Climate change is a national security issue that we’re not going to be able to address on our own,” he said.

“Climate change is going to change security in ways we can’t even imagine.”

Tennant’s death in 2018 was a major loss for the agency and for climate change research.

But his legacy continues to live on in the work of the Climate Change Intelligence program, which continues to use the agency’s resources to help address the climate crisis.

And as climate change continues to pose an ever-greater threat to national security, the agency’s work on climate change is likely to become even more important in the years to come. In fact, the agency’s climate change program is now one of its largest and most active, with over 300 staff members working on the program.

And that, in part, is thanks to the vision and leadership of John Tennant, who worked tirelessly to bring the agency’s resources to bear on one of the greatest challenges of our time.

NEW DELHI: Jan 10 (PTI) India's vehicle sales grew at a pace of 13 per cent in the first nine months of the current fiscal year compared to the same period last year due to better economic conditions and increased purchasing power among consumers.

The Indian Express

New Delhi: India’s vehicle sales grew at a pace of 13 per cent in the first nine months of the current fiscal year compared to the same period last year due to better economic conditions and increased purchasing power among consumers.

Q: What are the factors contributing to the growth in vehicle sales?

The growth in vehicle sales can be attributed to several factors, including the recovery of the economy following the pandemic, increased purchasing power among consumers, and the introduction of new models and features by manufacturers. Additionally, government incentives and subsidies for purchasing vehicles have also played a role in boosting sales.

Q: How is the growth affecting the auto industry?

The growth in vehicle sales is positively impacting the auto industry, leading to increased production, higher profits, and job creation. It also indicates a rebound in consumer confidence and economic growth.

Q: Are there any concerns related to this growth?

While the growth in vehicle sales is positive, concerns remain about the sustainability of this trend. Overproduction risks could lead to overcapacity and increased competition, potentially leading to industry consolidation. Additionally, the industry must continue to address environmental and sustainability concerns.

Interview with Gopal Krishna, CEO, FICCI:

The Indian Express: How optimistic are you about the future of the auto industry, given the recent growth?

Gopal Krishna: We are cautiously optimistic about the future of the auto industry. The recent growth is encouraging, but it's important to ensure that this momentum continues with sustainable practices and innovation.

The Indian Express: What role do government policies play in driving the growth in vehicle sales?

Gopal Krishna: Government policies play a crucial role in driving the growth in vehicle sales. Policies that encourage electric and green vehicles, offer incentives for purchases, and ensure road safety can significantly impact the auto industry.

The Indian Express: How is the industry addressing sustainability concerns?

Gopal Krishna: The industry is taking steps to address sustainability concerns by investing in research, development, and production of electric vehicles. It's also focusing on reducing carbon emissions and promoting environmentally friendly practices.

Hendra admitted he had bet on his matches, and money was transferred to him from his competitors.

The account allowed him to receive cash from an ATM. He also received money into his own bank account, the report states.

“After it did not suit him to show his expenses, 20 out of 50 million rupiah was transferred to him on his bank account,” the report stated.

Hendra’s method has one flaw. The need for him to play the line and his carefully-constructed technique is not just for the moment. He has to ensure that his technique is always on the money.
