EC looks at e-voter ID from next state polls

RITIKA CHOPRA

IN UP, AMRITSAR AND LATESTLY THE TURIN DISTRICT IN PUNJAB, the Election Commission has been handholding district officers in the roll-out of e-voter ID, a digital identity which users can verify on a mobile phone.

The commission said the launch of e-voter ID is a major development in the field of elections, and that it will help to address the challenges of voter identification and authentication.

The e-voter ID is a secure and verified digital identity that can be used for various purposes, including voting at polling stations and accessing government services.

However, the commission also noted that there are still some technical and logistical challenges that need to be addressed before the full roll-out of the e-voter ID.
Two months on, missing woman and 3 kids found hanging; suicide case lodged

SARVAGYA PRAJAPATI

TEN YEARS after they went missing, the decomposed body of a mother and her toddlers was found hanging from a mango tree in Rampur village near Gurdaspur.

The body of Shabnam Sharma and her two children, aged 2 and 5, were discovered Monday morning by locals who noticed the smell coming from the mango tree. The children were the couple’s only children, who were studying in school.

Informed of the incident by the locals who had spotted the dead bodies, the local administration and the police immediately rushed to the spot.

Shabnam, 37, and her two children were residents of Rampur town. She was the oldest daughter of Khurshid Ansari, who was killed in the 2017 Pulwama terror attack.

Adequate security cover

Responding to the police report, Deputy Commissioner (DC) Anil Kumar Bajaj, who was in the town for an official engagement.

“Adequate security cover will be provided to the family members of Shabnam and her children,” said Bajaj.

Several villagers who were present when the police started removing the bodies were shocked to find the mother and children dead hanging from the mango tree. Some villagers told police that Shabnam always wore only one dress and was not particularly fond of keeping her clothes clean, police said.

The police said the bodies had no injuries and had been in the same position for around one week.

Shabnam had been living with her children since her husband, Chetan Sharma, had been deployed with the Indian Army in Jammu.

The Central Government will provide all possible assistance to the family members of the deceased, Bajaj said.

The police said an investigation had been ordered to ascertain the cause of death.

Antisocial politics, says tomar

LAC standoff result of China's actions: India

The border standoff has continued for nearly 44 days on the eastern Ladakh sector along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) between India and China. India has been asking China to withdraw its forces from the Indian side of the LAC because, it believes, the Chinese forces have entered Indian territory.

The standoff started on June 15 when 20 Indian soldiers were killed in a violent clash with Chinese troops. Since then, India has been increasing its military presence along the LAC to counteract Chinese aggression.

The Indian government has also hinted that it is considering various options, including military action, to counter the Chinese threat.

The standoff has also led to a diplomatic row between India and China. In a recent meeting in Moscow, the two countries agreed to maintain open lines of communication and cooperation to resolve the issue.

India's Defence Minister Rajnath Singh has said that the stand-off was a result of Chinese military aggression.

"The stand-off has been a result of the Chinese military's aggressive acts," Singh said. "We will not sit idle and watch our hard-earned territory being occupied by the Chinese forces. We will take all necessary steps to ensure our sovereignty and territorial integrity."
WOMEN EMPOWERMENT
The Gateway to Development

The baton for social transformation, through the empowerment of women, with the goal to take the nation forward, has been passed on by great people through several centuries; from Raja Ram Mohan Roy to Mahatma Jyotiba Phule-Savitribai Phule, to Mahatma Gandhi, to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar. This baton, in current times, is being upheld by Shri. Sharadchandran Pawar.

Resistance to change is an integral part of human nature. The wisdom of Sharad Pawar, in the pursuit of empowering the nation, through the empowerment of women lies first and foremost, in the identification and empowerment of women, who themselves are responsible for change and who possess the approval of all women, who believe in empowering these women and in turn support them. The paradoxical truth is that the very families who seek to be the beneficiaries of transformation in society, to empower themselves, are hardly interested in empowering the woman in the family, and give her control over her own life. Most of them would go in for a "shadow empowerment" of women, as a means to empower themselves. I consider myself fortunate to be one among such remarkable women and such families, who have been identified and empowered by Shri. Sharad Pawar.

I met Hon’ble Shri. Sharadchandran Pawar for the first time ever, on 21 February 2002, at Silver Oak, his residence in Mumbai. It was the day that was nominated as the Member of the Legislative Council. The day was the day she gave me the vision and direction to my own path. His directions to me were clear and specific but was nominated as a representative of women, men, and the weaker and deprived sections of society.

In 2009, I called on Pawar Sahab with a request that I needed to arrange a "Mahila Melodra" in Phutnath, in which I invited 40000 women and he requested me to proceed over the function. He questioned me as to what was the purpose of such a programme. To be honest, I had not thought much through the thought but told him that I simply arranged a programme with different considerations of the same, and that I will do for women, would be a futile exercise. Indeed, he advised me to go back home and meet with a proposal that would completely empower women. He took care to give me specific directions on how such a programme could be conceptualized and promised to address all the requirements such as the basis, the female empowerment and the like.

Thus, a three-day programme entitled "Pragnant 2010" was organized. This was attended by over 10,000 women from all over the state. 500 stalls for the sale of goods produced by women self-help groups were set up. Competitions, cultural programmes, and training workshops for the women were organized on all three days. Along with Sharad Pawar, over a dozen ministers, senior IFS officers, vice-chancellors and experts from the non-government sector participated.

The highlight of the programme was the direct interaction of Sharad Pawar, the Union Minister for Agriculture, with more-than-a-crop women from across the state. The interaction ignited the required encouragement and confidence in the minds of those who had so far considered themselves voiceless and powerless. This interaction made women; the women aggregate with their own and can take their own fight into the limitless space. The women came back, a power that they had never imagined, they possessed themselves with themselves.

He realized in their minds something like what Annabakash Roy had said, "There’s really no such thing as the ‘voiceless’. They are only the unempowered."

The programme gave a big boost to the women self-help group movement in Maharashtra and led to several important decisions by the government towards the economic empowerment of women.

I have been in the curious to understand the impact of the "Empowerment of Women’s Policy", that had been brought forth by the Sharad Pawar, Shri. Sharad Pawar in 1994 in Maharashtra, when he was the then-Director General of the Ministry of Women’s Development, and the subsequent policies to study the implementation by the various ministers. The Gateway to Development was subsequently brought out as the National Women’s Policy after his active interference and persuasion at Panjim level in 2002.

With this intention, I visited the ministers of several departments and discussed the decisions taken by the government with the gender perspective. The meeting with the then-Deputy Chief Minister of Maharashtra, Shri. K. R. Patil endeared me with a new perspective and insight. I had a book in my hands on the LETTERS BETWEEN PANJIM JANUARY 1994 AND SHRI D.R. AMBEDKAR CONCERNING THE HINDU CODE BILL, Abb.

THE ATTACK

On the eve of the review of PCA, Prime Minister Narendra Modi addressed a joint session of Parliaments, saying he had seen nothing like this before in his life. The announcement of the decision to revoke Article 370, which gave special status to Jammu and Kashmir, had not been a foregone conclusion. It was a bold and controversial decision, met with mixed reactions.

While the government’s decision to abrogate Article 370 and Article 35A was widely praised, it was also met with criticism. Many voices, both inside and outside India, expressed concern about the implications of the move. Some feared it could lead to instability and violence, while others saw it as a necessary step to bring about peace and prosperity in the region.

The decision to hold a joint session of Parliament was a significant step in the process of discussing the future of Jammu and Kashmir. The joint session provided an opportunity for Members of Parliament from both houses to discuss the issue and come to a consensus.

CREDULOUS WORDS

As a student of the Jawaharlal Nehru University, I was disappointed with the letter by Telangana’s Minister of Education, K. T. Rama Rao, in your December 2 column, “Millionaire, social reformer.”

The letter attempts to cast a derogatory light on the Tirumala Tirupati Devasthanam, a source of income for the state of Andhra Pradesh.

I would like to point out that the TTD has been in existence since 1698 and, among other activities, provides free education, free medical facilities, free food distribution to the poor, and reservation to the socially and economically backward classes. The income of the TTD is utilized for the development of rural infrastructure, education, and health care.

I would like to encourage the minister to visit the TTD premises and see the work being done there. He should focus on the social and economic benefits provided by the TTD rather than questioning its existence.

COMPROMISE NEEDED

The article “Why Kisan Utsav” by N. Shankar (December 12) mentions the need for compromise in the upcoming dialogue between the government and the farmers. I agree with this need for compromise, but I believe a comprehensive approach is required to address the concerns of the farmers.

While the government has made some concessions in the new farm laws, the farmers’ demands for the repeal of the laws are still unfulfilled. A compromise must include a clear timeline for the implementation of the farmers’ demands and safeguards against future changes in the laws by the government.

In conclusion, a comprehensive compromise is necessary to address the farmers’ concerns and ensure a peaceful resolution to the current situation.

Reduction in India’s emissions

A reply released on the second day of the Paris conference by the environment ministry on India’s contribution to greenhouse gas emissions under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change shows the country’s emission targets are realistic, and India could meet them.

While the target of reducing emissions by 2030 is higher, the new targets show that emissions would peak by 2022, followed by a decline to 2025.

European leaders clinch deal on tougher 2030 climate goal

WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 11

The Washington Post

European leaders clinched a deal on Thursday to tighten the bloc's climate goals, promising to cut net emissions to zero by 2050, substantially toughening an existing 2030 target.

EUROPEAN COUNCIL

The European Union (EU) countries agreed to set more ambitious climate targets, helping to push the European Union's goal for 2030, to cut greenhouse gas emissions by at least 55% from 1990 levels by 2030, to an 80% cut.

The deal comes one week after the EU announced a proposal for a new EU-wide carbon market to help reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The proposal aims to reduce emissions by 2030 to 55% below 1990 levels for the whole of the EU, which would include the 27 member states.

The EU wants to “reach net zero” emissions by 2050, a deadline that scientists say will avoid the most catastrophic impacts of climate change.

The European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen said at a press conference on Friday that the deal is a “historic step forward” in the fight against climate change. She said that the deal is a “step forward” towards achieving the EU's climate goals.

Biden, Harris jointly named Time's 'Person of the Year'

CALIFORNIA SENATOR Kamala Harris, who has been the top contender in the US presidential race, was named Time magazine's 'Person of the Year' on Thursday, becoming the second woman to receive the honor.

The honor comes after Harris made history as the first Black woman and Asian American woman to be elected to the US Senate and as the first woman to be named as the Democratic Party's vice presidential nominee.

Harris, 55, became the first woman of color to serve in the Senate when she was elected in 2016. She has represented California in the Senate since 2017 and has been a leading figure in the Democratic Party.

Harris, who was born in印度, is the daughter of Indian immigrants. She has been a strong advocate for immigration reform and has called for an end to the Trump administration's policies that have separated families and led to the detention of thousands of immigrants.

Harris is also a vocal champion of women's rights and has been a vocal advocate for sexual assault survivors. She has been a strong supporter of the #MeToo movement and has called for an end to sexual assault and harassment in all areas of society.

Harris' appointment as vice presidential nominee in 2020 made history as the first Black woman and Asian American woman to be nominated for the vice presidency by a major political party in the US.

Dementias: Rugby stars set to file a lawsuit

Shane Prewett and Alix Popham in favor of increased safety measures in rugby.

The calls for increased safety measures in the sport have increased in recent years, following several high-profile cases of head injuries in rugby, particularly in the professional ranks. The World Rugby Union and governing bodies have been under increasing pressure to address these issues.

For example, the World Rugby Union has implemented several initiatives to reduce the risk of head injuries, including rule changes aimed at reducing the force of tackles and scrums. However, some players and their families have continued to call for more significant changes to the sport's governing rules.

One of the most high-profile cases involved former New Zealand All Blacks forward Carl Hayman, who suffered from dementia after a long career in rugby. Hayman's family has been particularly vocal in their calls for increased safety measures, and they have expressed frustration with the lack of progress made by World Rugby in addressing these issues.

The Prewett and Popham lawsuits are expected to have significant implications for rugby, with many other players and their families hoping to see similar actions taken on their behalf. The cases could potentially lead to groundbreaking changes in the sport's approach to safety, with World Rugby and governing bodies facing increased pressure to act.

Meanwhile, former British and Irish Lions and England star Matt Dawson has admitted that his career in rugby has contributed to his condition of progressive dementia.

"It's been a long process," Dawson said in an interview. "I'm not going to sugarcoat it, it's been a long time coming. I've been through a lot of difficult moments in my life, but this is the hardest one."

Dawson, who played 50 Test matches for England and 73 for the British and Irish Lions, said he was diagnosed with dementia in 2018, just four years after retiring from the sport.

He added: "I've been through a lot, but losing my memory is the worst thing that has happened to me. I've been through a lot of things, but losing your memory is the worst thing that can happen to anyone."

Dawson's case has raised concerns about the long-term effects of rugby on players' mental health, with many former players calling for increased safety measures to protect their fellow athletes from similar conditions.

One of the main concerns raised by former players and their families is the lack of protection against head injuries in rugby. The sport has seen several high-profile cases of serious head injuries in recent years, including those of New Zealand's Carl Hayman and England's Shane Williams, both of whom have since been diagnosed with dementia.

The cases have sparked debate about the need for increased safety measures in rugby, with some calling for changes to the sport's governing rules to reduce the risk of head injuries. World Rugby has already implemented several initiatives to address these concerns, including rule changes aimed at reducing the force of tackles and scrums.

However, many players and their families remain concerned about the long-term effects of rugby on their health, and they are calling for more significant changes to be made to the sport. The lawsuits filed by Prewett and Popham could potentially have significant implications for rugby, with the cases raising further questions about the sport's approach to safety and its responsibility to protect its players.

The cases have also highlighted the need for more research into the long-term effects of rugby on players' mental health, particularly in relation to dementia. While some studies have shown a link between rugby and dementia, more research is needed to fully understand the extent of the problem and to identify effective solutions.

The lawsuits have also raised questions about the role of government and other governing bodies in addressing these issues. While World Rugby has taken steps to increase safety in the sport, many players and their families have called for more significant changes to be made by the governing bodies.

The cases have also sparked a broader debate about the need for increased safety measures in all contact sports, with questions being raised about the role of government and other governing bodies in addressing these issues. While World Rugby has taken steps to increase safety in the sport, many players and their families have called for more significant changes to be made by the governing bodies.
