The current political landscape in West Bengal has been defined by the activities of the TMC, which has dominated the state's politics for the past two decades. However, with the recent appointment of Thakur as the leader of the TMC, there is a new element of uncertainty in the state's political climate. Thakur's arrival in the state has caused a stir among the state's political parties, who are concerned about the impact of her presence on the state's political dynamics.

Bengal

The situation in Bengal remains tense as farmers continue to protest against the central government's farm laws. The state government has been accused of not taking adequate measures to address the farmers' concerns. The farmers' movement has gained momentum in recent weeks, with thousands of farmers gathering in the state to demand the withdrawal of the farm laws.

Malnutrition in children worsens in many key states

According to a recent study conducted by the National Family Health Survey, malnutrition in children remains a significant issue in many parts of India. The study shows that the prevalence of stunting, which is a measure of chronic undernutrition, is high in many states. The study highlights the need for urgent action to address this issue and improve the nutritional status of children in these states.

Govt alleges hand of ‘tukdel tukde’ gang

The government has alleged that Thakur was involved in the killing of Bhawal, which took place in 2019. The government has claimed that the killing was a planned murder, and has accused Thakur of being involved in the murder. The government has also claimed that Thakur was involved in other criminal activities, including hooliganism and murder.

Ugrahan rally

The Ugrahan rally, organized by the BKU (Dakaunda), was held in the state of Uttar Pradesh. The rally was attended by thousands of farmers, who were protesting against the central government's farm laws. The rally was seen as a significant event in the country's political climate, as it highlighted the farmers' concerns and their struggle for justice.

The study shows that the prevalence of stunting, which is a measure of chronic undernutrition, is high in many states. The study highlights the need for urgent action to address this issue and improve the nutritional status of children in these states.

Sapkot and Singh are working on a project to develop a low-cost intervention for treating malnutrition in children. The intervention includes a multi-system approach, including nutrition, health, education, and social protection. The intervention is designed to be implemented in a phased manner, with the aim of improving the nutritional status of children in these states.

In the upcoming article, we will explore the latest developments in the farmers' movement, including the impact of the recent Supreme Court order on the situation in Bengal. We will also delve into the government's efforts to address the farmers' concerns, and the challenges that lie ahead in this complex political climate.

51.5% voting in 6th phase of elections in JK

BASHAPUR MUSAFIQ

The first phase of the Jammu and Kashmir Legislative Council (JKLC) elections are underway in the region, with the polling to take place in the 14 seats out of 36 seats in the Union Territory on Saturday. The voting pattern was almost the same as the previous five phases, with moderate turnout in most seats. The polling in some seats was above 70%, while in others it was as low as 25%. In the last phase of polling, an average of 47.5% voting took place across the 35 seats in the Union Territory, with no results yet declared.

The election commission has set up a control room in Srinagar to monitor the voting process, and a special team has been deployed to ensure fair polls. The security arrangements have been tightened in the region to prevent any incidents.

Meanwhile, the National Alliance of People's Movement (NAPM) has announced a strike against the ongoing elections in the region. The strike is scheduled to take place on the day of the election, and the NAPM has urged people to boycott the polls.

As caseloads, experts say spread may be more than what is known

AMIT SHRIVASTAVA

UNIVERSITY OF DELHI

NEW DELHI

As the caseloads continue to rise, experts are warning that the actual number of cases may be higher than what is officially reported. While the government has been lauding its success in controlling the pandemic, many experts believe that the data is underreported.

According to a recent study published in the Lancet, India’s COVID-19 death rate is among the highest in the world. The study found that the country’s death rate is more than double that of countries like the US and Brazil.

The government has been criticized for its handling of the pandemic, with many people pointing out that the country has failed to conduct enough tests and has been slow to vaccinate its population.

On the other hand, some experts believe that the government is doing everything it can to control the pandemic. They point out that the country has made great strides in vaccinating its population, and that the number of cases is likely to decline in the coming months.

WE were Nikon users in Mumbai in 2015 when we took the trip to the South of India. Dhiraj Nayyar had to attend a wedding. “My secret weapon is a Nikon D3. I only rarely use Canon or Fujifilm,” he informs us.

He had to leave behind the D3 for a while and the Nikon thread was broken. “It’s because the D3 is repairable. If a Nikon D4 has a problem, it cannot be repaired. So, the cost of buying a new one is high. That’s why I stick to the D3,” he informed us.

In the States, he decided to go blind. He does not read anything anymore. He reads by touch. His trained hands on the edge of the screen are very helpful. “I am not a photojournalist. I am a video journalist. I have been doing television for a long time now. So, I don’t have much use for photography,” he said.

In the USA, he experimented with a Nikon D3. “My/problem is that the D3 does not have a large sensor. It has a medium sensor, which is good for photography and not for video production. I use a Fuji X-T3 for video production.”

And so, he is motoring into this debate on digital sensors, which was initiated by the World Press Photographers Association. “They have said that the D3 is not good for video production. But I think it is good for video production,” he said.

Astaad’s name is often associated with a story. A friend of mine once told me that Astad was working with the Indian theatre director R. K. Laxman. He said, “I met Astad at a workshop in Delhi. He was a shy boy with a tentative manner. He would talk slowly and in a quiet voice.”

Astad’s name is often associated with a story. A friend of mine once told me that Astad was working with the Indian theatre director R. K. Laxman. He said, “I met Astad at a workshop in Delhi. He was a shy boy with a tentative manner. He would talk slowly and in a quiet voice.”

But when Astad began his dance performance, the audience was amazed. “I had neither context nor reference material for Astad’s dance. It was a complete blank slate for me. I had to create a new world for Astad’s dance,” he said.

DANCE LIKE ASTAD

Astad Deboo could break free of the stage and do a tandav on the Great Wall of China. He could shock tradition and yet remain open to collaborations. He was a citizen of the world, and he brought it home.

After graduating from the University of Bombay, Astad travelled across Europe to explore “the idea of dance that had been planted”. At the drop of the hat, he would dance in people’s homes, pubs and streets. He continued to do that even later. He has danced in the Netherlands, Sweden, Denmark, India, and at the UK’s National Theatre.

And so, he was initiated into dance education. Astad’s father worked with the Tatas. Louis, his uncle, was touring India. Louis’s technique and attitude has been the principle behind Astad’s dance. After the performance, Astad returned home and stood before the NGMA in Mumbai.

And so, he was initiated into dance education. Astad’s father worked with the Tatas. Louis, his uncle, was touring India. Louis’s technique and attitude has been the principle behind Astad’s dance. After the performance, Astad returned home and stood before the NGMA in Mumbai.
There isn’t any uniformity in mandis across states, so how can you then have one Act for the entire country?

The Chhattisgarh CM says the farmers’ protest is different from the 2011 anti-corruption movement, as states’ measures will constrain Naxalism soon, and criticises the 23 party leaders who went public with their concerns regarding the Congress. The session was moderated by Deputy Associate Editor Manoj C G

IDEA EXCHANGE

WHY BHUPESH BAGHEL

Two years ago, Baghel gave Chhattisgarh its most decisive victory in a state election, winning 68 out of Chhattisgarh’s 90 seats. He is among the few farmers and an Assembly in the Candy to centre the Counter’s farm laws in October this year.

BHUPESH BAGHEL, CHIEF MINISTER, CHHATTISGARH

The government has suggested a dew of modernism to the new laws. If there are farmers and the Opposition willing to accept?

What farmers want is not to lose their farmland. They want to not lose their rights of their land. What they want is to have a just compensation.

SUNIL SHAH: From the farmers’ point of view, what do you think will be the impact of the new laws?

The government has made a very strong point for the new laws. They have said that these laws will help in the development of the farmer and the country. But the farmers are not seeing it that way. They are saying that these laws will only benefit the companies and not the farmers.

We took our masses (talking about APMC reforms) to the public and were rejected... The BJP is busy doing some work.

Our manifesto says that we won’t have to have a separate government. We have promised to do away with the APMC system everywhere. We have promised to do away with the mandis. We have promised to do away with the middlemen.

What do you think is the most important thing that you can do for the farmers?

The most important thing that I can do for the farmers is to see that they get a fair price for their produce.

Coronavirus in donated eye tissue, concerns over transmission via transplant

How to measure a mountain

In a new measurement, China and Nepal have announced Mount Everest is 86 cm taller than the 8,848 m accepted globally so far. How was the original height calculated by Survey of India? What does the revision mean? Two of the seniormost of Survey of India explain in an interview to AMITABH SINHA

The researchers suggest that there is a strong possibility that the virus could be transmitted from a donor to a recipient during transplantation, leading to a potential risk of transmission.

In the UK study, published in the journal Nature Medicine, researchers from King's College London and Anglia Ruskin University, found that such eyes can be a source of COVID-19.

The researchers found that COVID-19 can affect the eye and can cause vision loss via transplantation, leading to a potential risk of transmission.

The findings show that before transplantation, it is imperative to screen eye donors for the presence of COVID-19.

The researchers examined 132 ocular tissue samples from post-mortem eyes to look for signs of COVID-19. The analysis of the eye tissues was independent of each other.

The researchers say that the virus can be present in human post-mortem eyes and this finding confirms earlier reports.

Asish happening now, the Home Ministry, following an attack on BJP president JPN Yadav's dharna, has written to spare those officers. She wrote, "The Centre cannot take any action against civil servants when the state government, through the legal process, has debarred them from being appointed.

The home ministry says it has written to the state government to ask for the officers to be debarred from being appointed, and also to appeal to the state government to take appropriate action against such officers.

John Ratcliffe said in a statement that the US National Intelligence Director had "intelligence of相當 strong confidence that Huawei and its affiliates have engaged in activities consistent with stealing and misappropriating US trade secrets from companies and US government entities. This includes activities related to the suppression of competition, including economic and military competition with the United States.

Ratcliffe, who was appointed by Trump in 2018, is a key ally of the president in the ongoing investigation into the origins of the coronavirus pandemic. The US intelligence community has been divided over whether the virus originated in a lab in Wuhan, China, or was transmitted from animals to humans. Ratcliffe's statement is likely to fuel speculation that the US will pursue legal action against Huawei and its affiliates, which are major players in the global telecommunications industry.

The Washington Post reported that Ratcliffe had been briefed on the intelligence by US intelligence agencies, including the National Security Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency. The agencies had been monitoring Huawei's activities for years, and had identified a number of cases in which the company had been found to be stealing trade secrets.

"This is a time of national crisis, and we cannot afford to allow any adversary to steal the secrets of American innovation and the US economy," Ratcliffe said in his statement. "We will continue to work with our partners to hold Huawei accountable for its actions and to ensure that the US remains a global leader in technology and innovation."
AMID SLOW RECOVERY IN STOCK PRICES OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED COMPANIES

State-owned cos plan greater investor outreach to boost market valuation

This week would continue with normalcy from home and amid the Covid-19 scenario, the role of direct mutual funds would continue to remain dominant for both the investors and the fund managers. The digitization that has happened and its impact that has taken place at an unprecedented speed has turned the paradigm of activities.

There have been some concerns from the fund managers which are based on having attractive valuations. The question is whether attractive valuations for equity funds are going for value at this time of recovering from the slowdown and again, populist agendas play a major role in determining the lower valuation in attracting investors.

Some investment bankers are of the view that the public market is keen to have a healthy balance sheet and having one healthy balance sheet could motivate a lot more investors to take a look at the company and become the shareholders. While the overall market remains in a loss of money, state-owned companies lagged behind in the sense of the market. They have, however, caught up gradually from the second half of December. While the Sensex has jumped by 14.51 per cent in December, the BSE PSU index has also zoomed up by 7.5 per cent for the period till December 31, 2020. Some investment bankers are of the view that we would like them to have investors by paying
