Delhi civic body wants restaurants to display how their meat is slaughtered, as part of policy with upsides and downsides

POLICY ONSAWN on many counts – for being superfluous and wasteful, impractical, unclear or even for being an instrument of snoopers. The Delhi Metropolitan Council, however, is making a move to control and classify meatlaughter in the capital in a way that would make it transparent, with an additional advantage that would make the meat industry environmentally sustainable.

However, there are downsides to this. Even though the Delhi government is making efforts to increase the transparency in the meat industry, there are fears that the industry will still have a considerable distance to travel to meet the new standards. From the consumer’s perspective, the new standards will mean a higher cost in the short term.

According to the DC, the move is being done for two reasons – to ensure that the meat industry is transparent and accountable to the public, and to reduce wastage and increase the efficiency of the meat industry.

The news has been met with mixed reactions from the meat industry. While some support the idea, others are concerned about the additional costs and the possibility of losing customers.

The move is also being seen as a way to increase the demand for local and organic meat, as people become more aware of the environmental costs of meat production.

The move is being hailed as a step towards making the meat industry more sustainable, but it is also being seen as a way for the government to control the meat trade and increase its revenue from meat taxes.

The move has been met with mixed reactions from the meat industry, with some supporting the idea, while others are concerned about the additional costs and the possibility of losing customers.

The cost of guaranteed MSP

Apart from repeal of farm laws, farmers are demanding guaranteed minimum support prices, which have no legal backing. A look at what the implications would be if the government did provide the guarantee.

The first is for repealing the three agricultural reform laws enacted by the Centre. These are the Farm Bills, 2020, 2021, and 2021 (Laws on Minimum Support Prices and Farm Services). The second is for setting up an independent commission to determine guaranteed minimum support prices for various crops. The third is to ensure a fair and equal price for the crops procured in the market. The fourth is to introduce a new law that would ensure that the government purchases crops at guaranteed minimum support prices. The fifth is to ensure that the government guarantees the guaranteed minimum support prices through law.

When Parliament passed Bills but govt did not give effect to those laws

There are also instances where the govt. did not give effect to those laws. Two examples are the National Agricultural (Mixtures of Seeds) Control Act, which Parliament passed during Prime Minister P V Narasimha Rao’s tenure. The government never brought these laws to the statute books. Another example is the Food and Agricultural Products (Registration and Licensing) Act, which Parliament passed in 2006 but never took any action to bring it into force.

Citing giving effect to a law

There are also instances where a government claims that it has given effect to a law, but the govt. has failed to implement the law. For example, in 2003 the National Agricultural (Mixtures of Seeds) Control Act was passed by Parliament in December 2003. Similarly, the three farm law protests and the farmers’ movement came into force in November 2020.

The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) has proposed a four-tier structure for tighter regulation of non-banking financial companies (NBFCs), creating a four-tier supervisory framework for non-banking financial companies (NBFCs) that will be classed into four supervisory-framework categories or regimes.

The RBI has proposed a four-tier structure for NBFCs: the upper layer will be for those NBFCs that have been performing well for a longer period, the middle layer for those NBFCs that have been performing reasonably well, the lower layer for those NBFCs that have been performing moderately well, and the bottom layer for those NBFCs that have been performing poorly.

The four-tier structure will be based on the performance of the NBFCs, which will be assessed based on various parameters such as profitability, capital adequacy, asset quality, and risk management.

The upper layer will have the least regulatory oversight, while the bottom layer will have the most regulatory oversight.

The RBI has also proposed that all NBFCs will be required to adhere to the guidelines and regulations prescribed by the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) and the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI).

The proposed four-tier structure aims to provide a more systematic and effective regulatory framework for NBFCs in India, ensuring that the systemically important NBFCs are adequately supervised and monitored, while the weaker ones are gradually brought into the fold.

The RBI has emphasized that the four-tier structure will be implemented gradually, with a phased approach to ensure a smooth transition.

The RBI has also proposed that all NBFCs will be required to adhere to the guidelines and regulations prescribed by the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) and the Securities and Exchange Board of India (SEBI).
