Editors' Note: This is the fourth time that the Indian Express has prioritised inequality as a theme in its coverage. Since 2004, we have worked to highlight disparities and challenges that exist across society, with a focus on economic inequality in almost every sector. This year, we have seen stark inequalities in the way workers have been affected by the pandemic, with some facing unemployment while others have remained employed. In this context, we have been highlighting the work of Oxfam, which has compiled data showing the pandemic has caused significant harm to the most vulnerable populations.

Kargil ignored in first Ladakh tableau

By Leena Ghosh

The Indian Express

Kargil, which bordering the Pakistan-controlled Kashmir, was the site of a major Indo-Pak conflict in 1999, has been completely ignored in a tableau celebrating the 525th birth anniversary of Guru Nanak Dev, which was displayed on the first day of the Rashtriya Ekta Diwas celebrations at the Rashtrapati Bhawan in New Delhi. The tableau, which was part of the Laccadive, Minicoy and Amindivi Islands tableau, did not feature any representation of the Kargil war, which is considered a major achievement for the Indian Army.

The tableau, which was displayed on December 25, 2020, showed the story of Guru Nanak Dev and his contributions to the Sikh community. However, the Kargil conflict, which took place from June 25, 1999, to July 12, 1999, and resulted in the death of over 1,000 soldiers, was completely absent from the tableau.

This omission has sparked protests from the Kargil War veterans and their families, who have been calling for the inclusion of the conflict in the tableau to honor the sacrifices made by the soldiers who fought in the war.

The Indian Express has reached out to the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting for comments on this issue, but has not received a response as of December 28, 2020.

Mantle the traditional society, or what remains of it, and turn it into a global market. Capitalism can be restructured to serve a more universal purpose.

The Great Reset, conceptualised by the founder and executive chairman of the WEF, Klaus Schwab, has evolved over the last few years and is based on the assessment that the world economy is in crisis. He argues that the situation has been made a lot worse by many factors, including the pandemic's devastating effects on global society, the unfolding of technological evolution, and the consequences of climate change.

“Govt spending actually helps middle & lower class, so fiscal stimulus is more important”

The big challenge has to be a measured easing of the fiscal stance, otherwise there will be no way to contain inflation. There will be no way to bring down the fiscal deficit because it will become very hard to raise any revenue. The impact of the stimulus will be really very minimal, because we will not have much more fiscal space. But what we need is a more measured approach, something that is more targeted, particularly for the lower and middle classes. Fiscal stimuli can actually help the lower and middle classes, particularly if the government has a clear growth agenda in place. And more importantly, it will help send a positive message to the markets, which is really important in these times. The government should continue to release money, but spent on the right things. What are the challenges this year?

The situation this year is going to be very difficult. Inflation is going to be a major challenge. The supply chain disruption is going to be a challenge. The geopolitical situation is going to be a challenge. But the key challenge is going to be inflation. How can the government balance the budget?

The government will have to meet both fiscal and monetary targets. On the fiscal side, they have to control their spending and on the monetary side, they need to control inflation. On the fiscal side, they need to control spending on goods and services. On the monetary side, they need to control inflation by raising interest rates.

The government will have to do both to meet both targets.
Why Court receiving Australia’s highest honour is an unpopular decision

Shubhriti Bhattacharyya, Mumbai

India's famous tennis player, Margaret Court, recently received Australia’s highest honour, but her selection for the award has divided opinion. The awards ceremony, held in Sydney recently, has sparked a debate in India, with many questioning the wisdom of giving such a prestigious honour to someone who was once known for her controversial views.

Margaret Court, who was known for her male chauvinistic views in the past, has been the subject of much debate in Australia. The government, however, believes that her achievements on the court justify the award. However, in India, her views have not been well-received.

A social media campaign was launched to oppose Court's appointment, with many calling for the police to investigate her. However, Court herself has said that she is in favour of the award, stating that it was a well-deserved recognition of her hard work and dedication.

India's External Affairs Ministry has also defended the decision, saying that Court’s contribution to the sport of tennis is widely recognized.

"It is unfortunate that some sections of the media and public are focussing on Court’s past views, which are not reflective of the values and principles that she has shown through her work in tennis," the ministry said in a statement.

"We believe that everyone has the right to change their views and beliefs as they grow older, and Margaret Court is no different. She has learned from her mistakes and is now a role model for many young athletes around the world," it added.

Despite the controversy, Court herself has said that she is looking forward to the award ceremony and the opportunity to meet some of her old teammates.

"I am very excited to be in Australia and meeting with my former teammates. I have so many fond memories of my time in tennis, and I am looking forward to reliving those memories," Court said.

However, the decision has not been met with universal approval.

"I don't think it's a good idea to give Margaret Court this award," said one Indian tennis player. "She has a history of making offensive and sexist comments, and it's not something we should be celebrating.

"I think it's a bit of a slap in the face to all the other women who have worked hard to break down barriers and pave the way for women in tennis," she added.

On the other hand, some Indian tennis players have defended Court, saying that her views have evolved over time and that she should be recognized for her contributions to the sport.

"Margaret Court is a great tennis player and has done a lot for the sport," said another Indian tennis player. "She is a role model for many young girls around the world, and her achievements should be celebrated.

"I think it's important to recognize people for their achievements, regardless of their past views," she added.

The controversy over the award has also sparked a wider debate about how society deals with public figures who have changed their views over time.

"It's important to recognize people for their achievements, regardless of their past views," said one Indian tennis player. "Margaret Court is a great tennis player and has done a lot for the sport. She is a role model for many young girls around the world, and her achievements should be celebrated. It's important to recognize people for their achievements, regardless of their past views.
