TMC demands inquiry into Red Fort breach

EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE, KOLKATA

THE TRINAMOOL Congress (TMC) on Wednesday called for an inquiry into the violence at the Red Fort in New Delhi on Republic Day during a tractor rally of farmers protesting against farm laws. TMC leader Sajjan Kumar Mandal said that a two-day session that started on Wednesday morning was suspended due to the Red Fort incident which started on Tuesday. Those who were involved in the protests entered the Red Fort during the protests on Tuesday. The protest is very painful. Over the last two months, they have been peacefully protesting in the cold. They realized that there was nothing left to go on. The Red Fort breach and the security cover? Why did the government have no prior information about the protest? It will be looked into after the Red Fort, which allows the government to probe the incident. The TMC’s attempts to table a joint resolution will be considered failed as they wanted to introduce the Red Fort Bill, which allows any non-majority party to move a resolution in the Assembly. “The Congress and TMC want to do something similar under Rule 193. What is the point of bringing two resolutions on the same issue under two different rules? What does the government have a resolution submitted, it is expected that it will be accepted,” state parliamentarians often leave Parliament in protest. In a warning to the BJP, Mandal said, “The law reduces the house of power. Those who think that the two bills will pass are in trouble. Their two bills on the Constitution will be passed. If they have any bills in the counterpart of the Constitution, they will have to leave the house.”

Govt for resuming talks only after farmers unions offer to drop their demands

NEW DELHI: The Union government on Saturday said it would only resume talks with farmer unions if they offer to drop their demands.

"The government is only willing to resume the talks if the farmer unions agree to drop their demands," a senior government official told The Indian Express.

On Friday, amid continuing protests against the three farm laws, Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman had said that the Centre was not in a position to resume talks if the farmers do not agree to remove their demands.

"The government is not in a position to resume talks with the farmer unions if they are not ready to drop their demands. Without a drop in their demands, the government cannot resume the talks," the government official said.

The government official said that the Centre was ready to engage in meaningful discussions with the farmers if they were ready to drop their demands, but the farmers have not yet shown any willingness to do so.

"The farmers unions have not yet shown any willingness to drop their demands, and therefore, the government cannot resume talks with them," the official said.

On Saturday, Union Agriculture Minister Narendra Singh Tomar said that the Centre was not in a position to begin talks with the farmers until they offered to drop their demands.

"We cannot begin the talks until the farmers offer to drop their demands," Tomar said.

Earlier, Union Agriculture Secretary Attaullah Khan said that the Centre was only willing to resume talks with the farmers if they offered to drop their demands.

"The Centre is only willing to resume talks with the farmers if they offer to drop their demands," Khan said.

The government has been holding talks with the farmers unions since last year, but the talks have not made any progress so far.

On Friday, the government had offered to hold further talks with the farmers if they were ready to drop their demands.

"We are ready to hold further talks with the farmers if they offer to drop their demands," the government official said.

However, the farmers unions have maintained that they will not drop their demands until the Centre agrees to their other demands, such as the withdrawal of the three laws and the rehabilitation of affected farmers.

"The farmers unions have maintained that they will not drop their demands until the Centre agrees to their other demands," the government official said.

On Saturday, the farmers unions had reiterated their demand for the withdrawal of the three laws.

"We will not drop our demands until the Centre agrees to our other demands," a farmer union leader said.

Meanwhile, the Centre has been holding talks with other stakeholders, including the state governments and the trade unions, to find a solution to the farmers' problem.

"We are holding talks with other stakeholders to find a solution to the farmers' problem," the government official said.

The farmers unions have also been holding protests across the country, with thousands of farmers marching to Delhi to demand the withdrawal of the three laws.

"The farmers unions have been holding protests across the country," the government official said.

On Saturday, the farmers unions had announced that they would continue their protests until their demands were met.

"We will continue our protests until our demands are met," a farmer union leader said.

Meanwhile, the Centre has been trying to find a solution to the farmers' problem, with several meetings being held with the farmers unions and other stakeholders.

"We are trying to find a solution to the farmers' problem," the government official said.

The farmers unions have been demanding the withdrawal of the three laws, which they say will benefit only the corporates and the middle class farmers.

A WORSENING DYNAMIC

Despite multiple rounds of talks, India and China are nowhere near a framework for disarmagement and de-escalation. The latest talks between India and China broke down as both countries took a hard line, with each accusing the other of provoking the crisis. China has threatened to use force if necessary, while India has vowed to defend itself and its allies.

The situation has worsened as both countries have deployed additional military units to the border areas. India has activated its reserve forces and deployed additional aircraft to the area, while China has boosts its military presence with additional troops and aircraft.

This has led to a situation where both countries are now facing the possibility of a military conflict. India's Prime Minister has said that India is prepared to fight a war if necessary, while China's President has said that his country is also prepared to defend its territory.

The international community is calling for a diplomatic solution to the crisis, with calls for both countries to pull back their forces and de-escalate the situation. However, it remains to be seen if these efforts will be successful.

The situation is particularly concerning for the local communities who live in the border areas. They are caught in the middle of the conflict and are facing increased insecurity.

The Indian government has also faced criticism for its handling of the situation. The government has been accused of not doing enough to de-escalate the conflict and of not taking the crisis seriously.

The situation is a worrying development and highlights the need for the international community to take action to prevent a military conflict from breaking out.

THE WRONG REDCEND

Bengal’s young and restless are contesting an election on the issues of despair and frustration. They want a new government that will address their concerns and provide them with a better future.

India Inc. is also keen on an election that will provide a stable political environment and a government that is likely to implement economic policies that will benefit the business community.

The election result will have significant implications for the Indian economy and the country's future direction.

THE OTHER AMMA

Jayalalithaa’s shift to a more conciliatory approach is welcomed by many in Tamil Nadu, but it remains to be seen if her government will be able to deliver on its promises.

The government has faced criticism for its handling of the state's economy, with many calling for it to take more decisive action to address the state's economic challenges.

The upcoming election will be a crucial test for the government, with the outcome likely to have significant implications for the state’s future direction.
People’s reluctance to take the shots could be a key hindrance in achieving immunity sooner.

Efficacy data of the Sputnik V vaccine, which is being administered in Russia, has been published for the general medical journal The Lancet. A study published on November 4, 2020, showed 87% efficacy for two doses of the vaccine given 21 days apart. The Lancet noted that the findings confirm the vaccine’s efficacy. This vaccine is the first to be approved in Europe under the EU’s Medical Emergency Use Authorisation procedure. The Lancet said the Russian data is in line with the data from the Pfizer-BioNTech Covid-19 vaccine. The Lancet has said it is being cautious in reaching a conclusion on other vaccines. It has also emphasised that the “data from Russia need to be corroborated.”

Explained: Coronavirus

Viral, their variants, and vaccines

Over the past week, significant new research has been published on the variants of the novel coronavirus that have emerged in several countries. Two of India’s most eminent virologists, who have been explaining a range of issues around the virus and vaccine in The Indian Express, summarise the new findings, and evaluate the concerns that they raise.

The experts

Vinodage S. Chavan

Associate Professor, Department of Microbiology & Immunology, School of Biological Sciences & Bioengineering, Indian Institute of Technology, Delhi

Shabir Jameel: While the Omicron variant has not yet been put to the test, the data collected so far point to a potential advantage by being able to shoot down antibodies faster than the previous variants.

The surprising discovery was published in the preprint server for biology. The analysis was done by researchers from ICMR-National Institute of Virology, Los Alamos National Laboratory, and the University of Washington.

The researchers examined sera from 3,361 Indian Covid-19 convalescent patients with the recent UK and South African variants. The sera were initially neutralised by convalescent antibodies from the same individual. However, this was then disrupted by new variants. The sera showed reduced neutralisation by the UK variant in comparison to the original Covid-19 strain.

The study found that UK variant has a very strong RBD mutation that was absent from the Indian strain, leading to the antibody escape. This suggests that the new variant could be more infectious, as antibodies from the previous infection cannot neutralise it.

Vinodage S. Chavan: The findings are supported by data from the UK. According to the UK Department of Health and Social Care, antibodies from people who have been vaccinated against the COVID-19 virus are not as effective against the new Omicron variant as against the original virus. This is because the new variant has a mutation called N501S, which changes a single amino acid in the spike protein of the virus. This mutation allows the variant to evade the immune system's attack on it.

Covaxin is effective against UK variant, shows study

A study published in Nature on January 21 found that Bharat Biotech’s Covaxin, which is being used in India for vaccination, was effective against the UK strain of COVID-19. The study found that the vaccine was able to prevent infection better than the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine.

Shabir Jameel: The findings of this study are encouraging, but more research is needed to confirm the results. It is important to note that the study was conducted on a small scale, and further large-scale trials are needed to confirm the findings.

The experts

The experts agree that more research is needed to understand the effectiveness of vaccines against new variants of COVID-19. However, they also point out that the current vaccines are still effective against most variants, and that measures such as mask-wearing and social distancing are important in preventing the spread of the virus.

Vinodage S. Chavan: The findings of this study are important, as they show that the current vaccines are effective against new variants. This is encouraging, as it means that the current vaccines are still effective in preventing the spread of the virus.

Shabir Jameel: The findings of this study are encouraging, but more research is needed to confirm the results. It is important to note that the study was conducted on a small scale, and further large-scale trials are needed to confirm the findings.

The SPF said in a statement that the boy had admitted to planning to attack mosques and had a strong inclination towards Islamic extremism.

He had been staying in Singapore for a short period of time and was identified by the SPF through intelligence information.

The SPF said that the boy had been under surveillance for a significant period and had been arrested without warrant.

The boy was taken to the Central Police Station for questioning and his passport was seized.

Loosing Rs 25 cr a season: Bengaluru FC to ISL owner Nita Ambani

MHIRI VASAVDA

THE OWNER OF Bengaluru FC, one of the country's most successful football clubs, is on the line for Rs 25 crores a season by the Indian Super League (ISL) franchises. The financial crisis due to the COVID-19 pandemic has led to a significant drop in revenue, impacting all football clubs. Bengaluru FC’s owner Karim Sadruddin said that the club is facing financial difficulties due to the additional costs of maintaining the club’s operations, which include the financial burden of the bubble and the loss of sponsorship revenue. He added that the club is working on a business plan to overcome the current financial crisis.

In a statement, Sadruddin said, “As the world continues to grapple with the COVID-19 pandemic, the football industry is also facing unprecedented challenges. Bengaluru FC is no exception, and we are working tirelessly to ensure the sustainability of our club.”

The financial crisis has led to a reduction in the number of matches played, which has resulted in a decrease in revenue. Meanwhile, the additional costs of maintaining the club’s operations, which include the financial burden of the bubble and the loss of sponsorship revenue, continue to weigh heavily on the club’s financial situation.

Bengaluru FC is one of the clubs that have been hit hard by the financial crisis. The club, which is owned by Nita Ambani, has been facing financial difficulties over the past few seasons due to the loss of sponsorship revenue and the additional costs of maintaining the club’s operations. Despite the challenges, the club is determined to continue competing at the highest level and remain a force in Indian football.

The club has been making efforts to reduce its costs and increase its revenue. However, the financial crisis has made it challenging to achieve these goals. The club’s owner, Nita Ambani, has been actively involved in finding solutions to overcome the financial crisis, and the club is responding with a strong business plan.

The financial crisis has also affected the club’s operations, and Sadruddin said that the club is working with the Indian Football Federation (IFF) and the Indian Super League (ISL) to ensure the club’s continued participation in the Indian Super League.

Sadruddin added, “We are committed to ensuring the sustainability of our club and maintaining our place in the Indian Super League. We are confident that with the support of the Indian Football Federation and the Indian Super League, we will overcome the current financial crisis and continue to compete at the highest level.”

The club’s financial crisis has also affected the club’s youth academy, and Sadruddin said that the club is making efforts to support the youth academy and ensure that young players continue to be given opportunities to develop their skills.

Sadruddin concluded, “We are committed to ensuring the sustainability of our club and maintaining our place in the Indian Super League. We are confident that with the support of the Indian Football Federation and the Indian Super League, we will overcome the current financial crisis and continue to compete at the highest level.”
