A massive hack in US, using a novel set of tools.

One of the biggest cyberattacks to have targeted US government agencies and private companies, "the SolarWinds hack" is being seen as a likely global effort. How was it carried out, and what kind of data has been compromised? Why have US government officials and politicians named Russia?

THE SOLARWINDS hack, a cyberattack recognized as one of the biggest ever targeted against US government agencies and several private companies, is likely a global cyberattack. It is being seen as the work of a "sophisticated threat actor," meaning a group with advanced knowledge and capabilities.

The SolarWinds hack was carried out by a group that has been linked to Russia. The US government has named Russia and its intelligence agency, the SVR, as the likely perpetrators. The US Treasury, Department of Commerce, and parts of the Pentagon are all believed to have been targeted.

The hack began in March 2020 and continued until May 2021. The attackers used a tool called "Sunburst" to infect systems with malware. The malware, known as "Sunblaster," was designed to steal data from infected systems.

The SolarWinds hack was detected in December 2020 when Microsoft and FireEye, two major cybersecurity companies, discovered signs of the attack. The hack targeted thousands of organizations, including US government agencies and private companies.

A WIDER WINDOW

The Supreme Court’s suggestion of a committee of farm law stakeholders offers a way forward — both sides take it

IT’S THE SUPREME COURT that has opened a window through which the farmers’ movement and the Modi government might find a way to extricate themselves from the existential crisis.

The court, while hearing the various cases of farmers protesting on Delhi's borders, on Friday, ordered the government to appoint a group of representatives of all opposing sides to look into the question of farm laws and find a way out.

It has proposed setting up an “independent and impartial” committee to hear both sides.

While the government is yet to make a decision on the proposal, the Supreme Court’s appeal to set up a committee is likely to give hope to farmers and the government, as the talks between the two sides have been at a standstill.

Under the proposed right to work for a period of six months from the start of the season, the farmers will have to work for a minimum of 50 days and in the remaining days, they have to work for a minimum of 30 days.

The court also directed the government to remove all the provisions in the law that are being implemented.

On Friday, Prime Minister Narendra Modi, addressing a meeting of farmers in Leh, told them that they have the right to protest but they must also work for their livelihood.

“People have the right to protest, but they should also work for their livelihood. You have the right to live, earn and move around, that’s your right and that’s the basic principle of human rights,” he said.

The court’s proposal is seen as a positive move towards resolving the long-drawn-out farmers’ protest.

The court has also said that the government should not use any force to evict the farmers from the protest sites.

If India has to meet climate change mitigation targets, or even exceed them by 2047, as the PM has assured, it needs to take action now to avoid a climate emergency.

THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY of the Paris ac- cord is being marked globally this December — the moment when the Paris Agreement was signed in 2015. India, the fifth state that has signed the Accord, will not only win its own target, but will also ensure its poor neighbour’s survival in the face of carbon emissions. This is a good occasion to review the country’s progress in reducing carbon.

India had set as its target (under Article 2.6 of the Paris accord in 2015) has matched global ambitions. India’s National Action Plan has been seen as a paradigm shift in climate action.

Initially, India had set a target of 175 GW of installed renewable capacity by 2022. However, the Indian government is currently on track to meet this target (as per the Ministry of New and Renewable Energy’s (MNRE) 2020 report). As of August 2020, India had installed 143.26 GW of renewable capacity, which is 63 per cent of the promised target.

The biggest challenge that remains is that it is not only the coal-based thermal power industry that needs to be transformed. Despite significant gains in terms of installed capacity for renewable power, coal still powers close to 72 per cent of India’s energy requirement. Even if India is able to achieve 2025 targets, coal would still account for 65 per cent of its energy mix.

The main issue is that most of the grid is still geared towards the thermal power industry. Not only is coal not on its way out, but it is also a factor of this issue, as evident from a decision the government took last June: For the first time ever, it has decided to pump coal blocks for commercial mining to the private sector.

ACOURT in Frankfurt has sentenced an Indian 'spy' to three years and five months in prison on the orders of Indian intelligence, the family of the accused told The Indian Express on Friday.

“Brijesh is a spy of Indian intelligence,” said the family.

Brijesh was a member of a team of spies who were part of the Indian intelligence agency’s efforts to infiltrate the German banking sector in the late 1990s. The team was led by an Indian intelligence officer who is still serving in Europe.

According to the family, Brijesh was arrested in India after being tipped off by an Indian intelligence officer who had infiltrated the banking sector in Europe.

The family said that Brijesh was not alone in his efforts to infiltrate the German banking sector. There were several other individuals who had been recruited by the Indian intelligence agency to carry out similar operations.

Brijesh was sentenced to three years and five months in prison after being found guilty of espionage.

The family said that Brijesh was a devoted family man who had always been loyal to his country.

Indian intelligence agencies have been known to recruit spies from across the globe to carry out operations.

The family said that they were disappointed with the sentence and that they would appeal the decision.

They said that Brijesh had always been a devoted family man and that his actions were not reflective of his character.

The family said that they would continue to fight for Brijesh’s release and that they would not give up hope.

Brijesh was born in India and had been living in Germany for the past 20 years.

The family said that they would continue to fight for Brijesh’s release and that they would not give up hope.

Ganguly's talks about his initiative... Umesh Yadav was sharp and disciplined, carving the short side as had been his staple in recent matches. India's top spinner's game plan with premeditation was evident, and he could restrict the break in his off spinners. By unscrewing his action, he can restrict the break in his off-spinners. THE HALLMARKS OF His INDIAN BOWLING undo him. It's very easy to think that he is doing something wrong, but the ball wasn't where he thought it would be. It wasn't too low, it wasn't too high. It was just a little bit of a different trajectory. He was trying to do something different, but it wasn't working. The ball that dismissed him might be seen as a mistake, but the execution was spot on.

The hallmark of India's bowling is its adaptability and quick thinking, but domestic cricket has its own limitations. They have no power to adjust their approach as it is already pre-determined by their coaches. Any small adjustment or tweak has to be done by them on their own. The results of their efforts are also not always visible. Umesh Yadav was sharp and disciplined, carving the short side as had been his staple in recent matches.
