Army Chief Naravane visits forward areas along LAC in Ladakh

Army Chief Bipin Rawat visited forward areas along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) in Ladakh on Tuesday. The visit came on the back of recent tensions at the LAC in the arid region, where temperatures are as low as minus 14,000 feet. The altitude and the harsh environment for soldiers are challenging for the Indian Army.

According to the Indian Express, Rawat expressed concern over the scarcity of infrastructure in the region. He stressed the need to improve living conditions and facilities for soldiers stationed in the arid region. Rawat also reviewed the operational preparedness and discussed the escalation of security concerns in Ladakh with the troops.

The visit comes in the wake of escalating tensions at the LAC, following the Galwan Valley face-off earlier this year. The recent influx of Chinese troops has sparked concerns among Indian Army officers about the potential for another clash.

The Army chief also discussed the need for improved infrastructure and better facilities for soldiers stationed in the high-altitude areas. He urged the troops to maintain their high standards of discipline and prepare themselves for any eventualities.

Rawat also took stock of the various units along the LAC and reviewed the security situation in the region. He expressed concern over the scarcity of infrastructure and the harsh environment for soldiers stationed in the arid region.

The visit is significant as it comes at a time when India and China are engaged in a tense standoff near the LAC in the Galwan Valley area. The standoff escalated in June, leading to the worst border clash in 45 years, resulting in the loss of 20 Indian soldiers. The Indian Army has been ramping up its defenses in the region in response to the Chinese incursions.

Rawat's visit to the forward areas is expected to boost the morale of the troops and send a strong message to the Chinese military about India's preparedness to respond to any挑衅.

Why virus in Antarctica isn't an Indian worry yet

ATLANTIC is a continent of ice where it is not uncommon to see polar bears walking the streets. But the recent news about a virus in Antarctica might come as a surprise to many. The continent is home to some of the most remote and isolated research stations in the world, and it is not uncommon for scientists to be there for months at a time. However, the recent discovery of a virus in Antarctica has raised some concerns among scientists and policymakers.

The virus, which was detected in samples collected from a research station in the Antarctic, has raised concerns about the potential for transmission to humans. The research station is located on the Antarctic Peninsula, which is a region with some of the most remote and isolated research stations in the world. The virus was detected in samples collected from a research station in the Antarctic, which has raised concerns about the potential for transmission to humans.

The virus was first detected in a sample collected from a research station in the Antarctic in 2019. The samples were collected as part of a long-term study of the health of the local wildlife. The samples were analyzed by researchers at the University of Oxford, who found that the virus was closely related to a previously known virus in seals. The researchers said that the virus was unlikely to pose a significant threat to humans, but that further research was needed to understand its potential for transmission.

MESSAGE FROM J&K
Not exactly a spring but DDC election results mark a thaw in J&K’s frozen politics, what next is the test

TUFTON and Kashmiri leaders have spoken unflatteringly about the People’s Alliance for Gupkar Declaration’s (PAGD) in the District Development Council (DDC) elections in Kashmir. The claims are too loud for the other political parties to ignore. The Centre stepped into the political landscape of this union territory, the Jammu and Kashmir, and the Srinagar-based PAGD made its presence felt at the election forum. With the BJP, the Congress, and the National Conference (NC) together, the PAGD has made its mark in this elections. With its members to the elected DDC, the PAGD has increased its popularity.

In the 2016 assembly elections, the PAGD brought to light the issues of minorities in J&K, especially in the Kashmir Valley. The election results in 2016 surprised everyone, with the PAGD emerging as the third-largest party, pushing the NC to the fourth position. This was a significant achievement for the party, which was formed in 2014 to represent the Kashmiri anti-fascist and secular forces. The PAGD’s success in the 2016 elections was a testament to the party’s ability to mobilize a broad coalition of forces to challenge the dominance of the National Conference and the Congress in J&K.

The PAGD’s success in the 2016 elections was a testament to the party’s ability to mobilize a broad coalition of forces to challenge the dominance of the National Conference and the Congress in J&K. The party’s popularity was, in large part, due to its ability to appeal to a wide range of voters, including those who were disillusioned with the traditional parties. The PAGD’s success in the 2016 elections was a significant achievement for the party, which was formed in 2014 to represent the Kashmiri anti-fascist and secular forces.

But, in the 2019 elections, the PAGD’s performance was disappointing. The party failed to win any seats in the Jammu region and won just one seat in the Kashmir region. This was a significant setback for the PAGD, which had hoped to make further gains in the 2019 elections.

In the 2022 DDC elections, the PAGD made a comeback, winning 27 seats in the Jammu region and 9 seats in the Kashmir region. This was a significant achievement for the party, which had been struggling to make progress in recent times.

The insecure worker

Preference for formalised employment can improve industrial relations

Radhika Kapoor

At this government attempts to woo investors in the country, the insecurity of workers continues. The lack of safeguards for the informal sector means that workers continue to face exploitation. While some industries have begun to formalise employment, many continue to operate in the informal sector. This has led to a decrease in the number of workers employed in the formal sector, which is worrying given the declining trend in formal employment in the country. The informal sector accounts for a significant portion of the economy and provides employment to millions of people. Therefore, efforts to formalise employment in the informal sector are crucial.

The situation is further complicated by the lack of adequate regulations and laws to protect workers in the informal sector. The lack of regulations and enforcement of existing laws has led to a situation where workers are at the mercy of employers. The government needs to take steps to improve the situation, including the provision of training and skill development programs, and the establishment of grievance redress mechanisms for workers.

The government needs to take a holistic approach to address the issue of insecurity among workers. It needs to develop a comprehensive policy framework that addresses the needs of workers in the informal sector. This includes the provision of social security benefits, such as health and life insurance, and access to affordable housing and education.

The government needs to work closely with trade unions and other stakeholders to develop these policies. This will require a strong and effective government agency to monitor and enforce these policies, as well as a strong and effective trade union movement to represent the interests of workers in the informal sector.

In conclusion, the lack of formal employment is a major issue that needs to be addressed. The government needs to take steps to improve the situation, including the provision of training and skill development programs, and the establishment of grievance redress mechanisms for workers. The government needs to work closely with trade unions and other stakeholders to develop these policies. This will require a strong and effective government agency to monitor and enforce these policies, as well as a strong and effective trade union movement to represent the interests of workers in the informal sector.
