The river Ganga is more than just a river, it has been a symbol of devotion and spiritual significance for billions of people. It is a vital water resource in the north Indian region and has ecological and cultural importance. Considered as the abode of the Hindu goddess Ganga, it is revered by Hindus as a sacred river. The Ganga is facing several challenges from high levels of pollution, radioactive waste, and industrial run-off, resulting in a degradation of its ecosystem and affecting its ecological balance.

The Government of India has launched the Namami Gange program under the leadership of Prime Minister Narendra Modi. It is a flagship program for rejuvenating the river Ganga and its tributaries. The National Mission for Clean Ganga (NMCG) is the implementing agency for this integrated program, launched on a massive scale of 964, 500 crores with assured funding consisting of multi-sectoral, multi-agency and multi-level interventions. Under Namami Gange, the focus is on the holistic and integrated management of the Ganga and its cities and the actions along the river.

A total of 34 sewerage projects have been sanctioned under the Namami Gange program at a cost of over Rs. 1,200 crores. These projects have been completed and another 38 are at various stages of execution. The Namami Gange program has also demonstrated the expenditure has been increased many folds with the help of the government.

Public Spaces: River front spaces have been created to reconnect with the past and visitors of all ages have emerged as key stakeholders. It has proved to be a major driver for tourism in the area and has also boosted local economies.

Afforestation and Biodiversity - In Uttarakhand, the rich biodiversity of the state is a major highlight of the Namami Gange program. Efforts have been made to reconnect people with nature and to promote sustainable practices.

HEMANT SOREN
CHIEF MINISTER, JHARKHAND
The Centre is within its rights to enact laws promulgating barrier-free trade (both inter-state and intra-state) and also to relax agricultural restrictions. But that can only be after the farmer has consented. While the Essential Commodities (Amendment) Act exempts traders and processors from stocking products past the posse, the same cannot be said of the other two Central laws. Regulations of farm produce by farmers, which includes mandis or via contract cultivation arrangements, are the responsibility of the states, not the Centre.

In November 2020, the Finance Commission submitted its interim report, and the second report will be presented in 2022. It has recommended that the Centre has the power to temporarily allow the states to reframe the policy, but the Centre must be paid a portion of the revenue generated. The states have to make a case for any such change, and the Centre will then decide whether to allow it. This is a significant step forward, as it allows the Centre to influence state policies, but also gives the states some leeway to act as they see fit.

The question has now arisen: What happens if the farmers or traders do not consent? In that case, the Centre can invoke a “public interest” clause to override the states' decisions. This would allow the Centre to overrule the states, but it could also lead to a constitutional crisis if the Centre acted too aggressively.

The Centre's decision to invoke the “public interest” clause would set a dangerous precedent, as it could be used to override any decision taken by the states. This would be a violation of federalism, as it would give the Centre too much power. It would also set a bad precedent for other states, as they would see that they could be overruled by the Centre at any time.

The Centre must therefore be careful in using this power, and it should only be used as a last resort. The Centre should work with the states to find a solution that is acceptable to all, and it should not use this power to override the states' decisions.

The Centre's decision to invoke the “public interest” clause would be a major setback for federalism in India. It would give the Centre too much power, and it would set a bad precedent for other states. The Centre must therefore be careful in using this power, and it should only be used as a last resort.

WHY ATMANIRBHARTAIN

Reinforcing this idea was the notion of a natural terrain—the Anglosphere. Britain’s main international vehicle after the Second World War. It was an ideational construct that was rooted in the belief that the UK, along with a select group of countries, including Canada, Australia, and New Zealand, shared common values, beliefs, similar legal traditions, and shared history. The Anglosphere was seen as a framework that allowed free flow of goods and talent among members and was an interesting place for Indo-Pakistani filmmakers to set their stories.

The Anglosphere is a concept that has been debated and challenged over the years. While the idea of an Anglosphere gained traction and was used as a source of comfort, it was also recognized that it could be isolating. Film festivals, like the BFI London Film Festival, have always played a critical role in bringing together filmmakers from around the world, and in recent years, the pandemic has highlighted the importance of such platforms in providing a space for dialogue and connection. As a result, filmmakers and film lovers have turned to online platforms for live interaction with their fellow filmmakers and fans, and watching films has been a source of comfort during these tumultuous times.

In Delhi, the Anglosphere is quickly dismissed as a colonial construct. Those who let the Indian colonial past overshadow its current strategic judgments. However, it is important to note that the Anglosphere has a significant role to play in the world. China, however, was always an important player in the Anglosphere. Although the Anglosphere may not be as significant today as it once was, it is still an important framework for understanding the relationships between countries. China, for example, has been using its power to build alliances and gain influence in the world, and this has led to a realignment of the Anglosphere. The Anglosphere is no longer as strong as it once was, but it is still an important framework for understanding the relationships between countries.

Owensboro, Ky., Jan. 17 (AP) – A Texas school district is using its students for a campaign against domestic violence.

The students designed posters and mini-books with messages to promote awareness and understanding of issues surrounding domestic violence.

Their campaign was part of a larger effort by the district to educate students about the topic and empower them to take action.

“By raising awareness and encouraging students to become advocates, we aim to create a safer environment for everyone in the school community,” said Dr. Sherry Parker, Superintendent of the district.

The campaign includes various activities and resources, such as workshops, posters, and a website.

“The goal is to create a culture of respect and understanding and to ensure that all students feel safe and valued within our school,” said Dr. Parker.

The district hopes to continue the initiative in the future and expand its reach to other schools.

The students’ posters feature colorful images and inspiring quotes, while the mini-books provide information on how to recognize and address domestic violence.

“I thought it was really important to learn about this issue and take action,” said student Sarah Johnson. “It’s not just something that affects adults; it’s something that we need to be aware of and help prevent.”

The campaign has received positive feedback from students, parents, and teachers.

“This is an excellent initiative that will help create a safer learning environment,” said parent Emily Smith. “I’m proud of our students for taking an active role in promoting awareness and understanding.”

Teacher Mr. James Mitchell added, “This is an important topic, and it’s great to see our students taking on this responsibility. It’s a good lesson for everyone.”

The district’s commitment to this initiative has been recognized and supported by local organizations and community leaders.

“This is a great partnership between the school and community,” said local politician Michael Garcia. “It’s important to empower our youth to become leaders and make a difference.”

The district encourages continued support and participation in the initiative to create a safer, more respectful school environment.
